685. —— Some degree of present nuisance existing—Which may continue or increase.]—The sewage of a town had for many years been drained by comrs. acting under a local Act of Parliament into a stream passing through the pltf.'s land, which was beyond their district, without perceptibly polluting it. But for some years before the filing of the bill, in consequence of the increase of the town, the stream became perceptibly polluted, & continued to increase in impurity. Decree of the Master of the Rolls restraining the comrs. from draining the town into the stream so as to pollute the water to the injury of pltf. affirmed. Although the fact of prospective nuisance is not in itself a ground for the interference of the ct., yet if some degree of present nuisance exists, the ct. will take into account its probable continuance & increase.

If the fouling of the stream by defts. amounts to a nuisance at law, & if this nuisance seriously affects the estate, this ct. ought to interfere to prevent it (TURNER, L.J.).—GOLDSMID v. TUNBRIDGE WELLS IMPROVEMENT COMRS. 686. —— Threat to continue nuisance.]—Action against a lieutenant-general in command of troops to restrain an alleged nuisance to a neighbouring proprietor caused by the noise & vibration of rifle practice by the troops under his command. The land on which the practice took place was vested in the Secretary of State for War, & by various Acts of Parliament authority was given to use the land for military purposes. There was no allegation in the statement of claim that deft. threatened to continue the nuisance, or that the military use of the land was unreasonable. It appeared also by the statement of claim that deft. was not the owner of the land:—Held: a threat to continue the nuisance was necessary in order to obtain an injunction; the Secretary of State for War was a necessary party; & as the land was vested in the Secretary of State for War for military purposes by Act of Parliament, the ct. had no authority to interfere with his discretion, unless it could be proved that the use to which the land was put was, even for military purposes, unreasonable.—HAWLEY v. STEELE (1877), 6 Ch. 687. Defendant insisting on right to do act — Injunction granted.]—A canal co. was established by certain Acts of Parliament. The Acts gave the canal proprietors rights as to taking water from streams within the distance of two thousand yards, for the purpose of making & maintaining the canal. They purchased a mill on a stream, from which stream they had the right to take water. In this way they became riparian owners. As such they were entitled to the flow of water from brooks & streams running into that stream, subject only to the rights which other riparian owners at the upper part of the stream might lawfully exercise. The directors of a waterworks co. purchased a mill on the upper part of the same stream, & so became riparian owners as the owner of that mill had been. They not only used the water for the purposes & in the manner allowed by law to every riparian owner, but collected it into a permanent reservoir for the supply of an adjacent town, & claimed, as their legal right, such a user of it:—Held: this use of the water by the directors of the waterworks co. was not a reasonable use of the stream, such as could justifiably be made by an upper riparian owner, & the canal proprietors, who were also riparian owners, whose flow of water was thereby affected, were entitled to come into equity, & obtain an injunction to restrain this use of the water.—SWINDON WATERWORKS CO. v. WILTS & BERKS CANAL NAVIGATION CO. In an action by a sanitary authority to restrain the sanitary authority of a neighbouring district from authorising or directing sewage from their district to flow into the sewers of pltfs., the ct. granted an injunction as to the future, but refused to grant a mandatory injunction to compel the stopping up of existing drains; (a) because to do so would cause serious inconvenience to the district, & (b) because it is doubtful whether a local board have power to stop up drains which they have once authorised to be connected with their sewers. 699. —— —— Nuisance on adjoining land—No nuisance appearing on owner's land.]—(1) By Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 12, in any case where a nuisance, a term, which includes ditches & drains injurious to health, is ascertained by the local authority to exist, they shall cause complaint thereof to be made before a justice of the peace, & the justice shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the person whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance arises or is continued, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before any two justices who shall proceed to inquire into the complaint, & if it be proved to their satisfaction that the nuisance exists, shall make an order on such person, owner or occupier, for the abatement, discontinuance & prohibition of the nuisance. By sect. 13 the justices may require the person upon whom the order is made to drain, empty, cleanse, fill up, amend or remove the injurious ditch, drain, etc. The occupiers of a brewery had for upwards of twenty years discharged the refuse from it into a barrel drain, which, after passing along a turnpike road, entered land belonging to another proprietor. The proprietor of this land did not get rid of the refuse as his predecessors had done, & it became after it had reached his land a nuisance:—Held: the occupier of the brewery was a person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance was caused, & an order of justices directing him to abate the nuisance by cutting off all communication between the drains of his premises & the barrel drain was valid.

(2) Deft., having obtained the necessary consent, made a drain leading from his own premises through adjoining land. This drain, which received the refuse from several houses & pigties belonging to deft., & let to yearly tenants, polluted the water of neighbouring streams, & became a nuisance:—Held: deft. must be taken to be a person by whose act, etc., the nuisance was caused, & might be ordered to abate & discontinue the nuisance.—BROWN v. BUSSELL, FRANCOMB v. FREEMAN (1868), L. 700. —— —— —— Necessity for proof that nuisance continues by owner's default.]—Applts. were a public body having certain jurisdiction & powers over the River Thames, the bed & soil thereof & of the shores within the flux & reflux of the tides were vested in them by statute. The Acts by which their duties were regulated gave them various powers for the improvement of the navigation of the river, but gave them no power of scavenging or removing nuisances in the portion of the river hereafter referred to, & their power of raising funds, & the application of the funds when raised, were strictly limited by statute & did not include a power of raising money for the sanitary improvements of such portion of the river. A nuisance injurious & dangerous to health existed between high & low water marks in a tidal creek running inland about 400 to 500 feet from the line of the river; it consisted of an accumulation of foul mud, which was largely composed of decomposing organic matter, & was chiefly derived from matter held in suspension in the water or floating on its surface & left when the tide receded; it was impossible to fix upon any persons as having caused the accumulation. An order having been made upon applts. as owners of the premises upon which the nuisance existed for its abatement:—Held: Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 4 (1), must be read with the proviso in sub-sect. 3 (b); where the person causing the nuisance could not be found, the liability of the owner of the premises to abate it only arose where it was shown that it continued by his act, default, or sufferance, & the order upon applts. was therefore wrongly made.—THAMES CONSERVATORS v. PORT OF LONDON SANITARY AUTHORITY, [1894] 1 Q. 701. —— —— ——.]—The drain connecting a house occupied by a tenant, with the sewer became clogged so that the sewage would not pass through. There was nothing to show what caused the stoppage. The local authority served a notice to abate the nuisance upon the owner of the house under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 94, & took proceedings against him for non-compliance therewith. The magistrate found as a fact that the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arose could not "be found," & held that the local authority could proceed against the owner:—Held: there being nothing to show what caused the stoppage of the drain & the consequent nuisance, the magistrate could properly find that the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arose could not "be found," within Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 94, & the local authority were therefore entitled to serve the notice upon the owner of the premises & to proceed against him.—RHYMNEY IRON CO. v. GELLIGAER DISTRICT COUNCIL, [1917] 1 K. land in the neighbourhood; & about two years ago the landowner, without applt.'s consent, made a sewer under the land he occupied. Pecuniary compensation was claimed at the time, but during the two years the sewage of several houses passed through the sewer; applt., being unable to get satisfaction from his landlord, at length stopped up the sewer, & the local board obtained a conviction against him under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), ss. 94 & 96, although no nuisance existed on his land:—Held: upon a case stated, applt. was a person by whose act the nuisance arose or continued; & that he was rightly convicted.—RIDDELL v. SPEAR (1879), 40 L. T. 130; 43 J. P. 317, D. C.

704. —— Local authority undertaking to do work from default in which nuisance arises—Whether owner liable.]—Applt. was the owner of certain cottages which were built in 1888, & which he purchased in May, 1897. Between the months of Mar. & Oct. 1896, typhoid fever occurred in some of these cottages, which were fitted with double privy middens. During the time that elapsed between the time that the patients were attacked & the notification to the authorities, the excreta of the patients were put in the privy middens to the knowledge of the authorities, which authorities had undertaken the cleansing of these privy middens under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 42. Upon the notification of the disease the authorities supplied covered pails, & superintended the disinfecting of the places infected by such excreta, but these measures failed to get rid of & destroy the typhoid germs, & would never do so, though they might have been destroyed when the excreta were first placed there. The presence of these germs constituted a nuisance, & the authorities then caused a notice to be served upon applt., under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 94, to abate this nuisance. Upon non-compliance with this notice, an order was made by the petty sessions requiring applt. to comply with the notice. Applt. appealed to quarter sessions who upheld the order:—Held: applt. was not liable under the Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), to abate this nuisance, & the complaint therefore must be discharged.—BARNETT v. LASKEY (1898), 68 L. J. Q. B. 55; 79 L. T. 408; 63 J. P. 5, D. C.

705. —— Person sending sewage down pipe—Act sole cause of nuisance.]—The fact that a pipe which has no lawful outlet for sewage receives sewage from a house as well as surface water from a highway is not of itself proof that the pipe is a sewer. If a nuisance arises solely in consequence of a person's own act in sending sewage down such a pipe, he is responsible under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), ss. 94 & 95, as a person causing or continuing the nuisance by his "act, default or sufferance."—WINCANTON RURAL COUNCIL v. PARSONS, [1905] 2 K. 707. —— Reversioner.]—Pltfs., after receiving a notice under the Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), from the urban sanitary authority of a nuisance existing on certain premises in 1909, carried out the repairs required by the notice at their own expense & sued deft. as for money paid by them at deft.'s request. Pltfs. put in admissions by deft. (a) that the reversion expectant upon a lease, dated Jan. 3, 1883, was vested in deft., & (b) that the premises were held by pltfs. as tenants of deft. under the said lease. Pltfs. put in the lease, by which a Mr. & Mrs. H. demised the premises which were at Bournemouth, to one D. for the remainder of a term of eighty years from Sept. 29, 1840, less the last seven days thereof, at a rent of £60 per annum. On this evidence the county ct. judge held that deft. was the owner of the premises within Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55). Deft. appealed on the ground that there was no evidence of such ownership:—Held: there was some evidence of such ownership, & therefore the appeal must be dismissed. The ct. themselves would have required further & better evidence of ownership.—WAREHAM & DALE, LTD. v. FYFFE (1910), 74 J. P. 249; 8 L. G. R. 620, D. C.

708. —— Person in receipt of rack rent.]—Resp. was lessee of a house in the county of London, which he let to one A. at a rental of 15*s.* a week, subsequently raised to £1 0*s.* 9¾*d.* a week. A. occupied the basement himself & sublet the three upper floors, each to a different tenant. The total rent paid by the three tenants to A. was £1 2*s.* a week. There was no water supply on two of the upper floors, & the sanitary authority by virtue of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), ss. 4 & 48, amended by the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1907 (c. clxxv), s. 78, served notice on resp. as "owner of the premises" to abate the nuisance & provide a proper water supply upon these floors. Resp. failed to comply with the notice, & upon a complaint against him the justices refused to convict on the ground that he was not "owner" as defined by the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. clxxv), s. 141:—Held: the justices had wrongly decided, & the case must be remitted to them with a direction to make the order asked.

"Owner" for the purposes of the above statutory provisions means the person who for the time being receives the rack rent of the whole of the premises.

A mesne tenant who receives subsidiary rents from parts of the premises less than the whole is not "owner of the premises," even though the rents which he receives make up two thirds of the full annual value of the premises & so exceed that which would constitute a rack rent of the whole premises.—KENSINGTON BOROUGH COUNCIL v. ALLEN, [1926] 1 K. Applts. were possessed of chemical works at H., & were entitled to discharge refuse by two separate drains, into a public sewer. By the one drain liquid impregnated with muriatic acid was discharged, & by the other liquid impregnated with sulphur. Upon their combination in the sewer sulphuretted hydrogen gas was produced, which escaped in sufficient quantities to be injurious to the public health. No nuisance existed in applts.' drains. Resps. had not properly flushed, cleansed, & trapped the sewer. Complaint having been made by resps. of the escape of the sulphuretted hydrogen gas, an order for the abatement thereof was made by justices upon applts. :—Held : the escape of sulphuretted hydrogen gas from the sewer was a nuisance within the meaning of Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 8, it arose from the act of applts., & resps. could lawfully make complaint thereof, although they themselves might have contributed to the existence of the nuisance.—ST. 712. Occupier voluntarily executing necessary works — Recovery of expenses from owner.]—Under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), a sanitary authority served on certain premises an intimation or warning, addressed to the owners, that, if certain necessary works were not completed within a specified time, they would commence proceedings against them "by the service of a statutory notice." Thereupon, the occupier, without forwarding the document to the owners, or informing them of it, caused the work to be executed, & then sought to recover the amount expended thereon from the owners :—Held : the occupiers, not being compellable to execute the work, had acted as mere volunteers in doing so, & had no claim to be reimbursed by the owners.—THOMPSON & NORRIS MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. v. HAWES (1895), 73 L. 715. —— —— ——.]—The owners of a house let it to deft. for a term of three years at a rent of £70, deft. agreeing to pay "all rates, taxes, assessments, & outgoings whatsoever in respect of the premises." After the expiry of the term deft. continued in occupation of the house without any fresh agreement, & paid rent for it at the same rate. Subsequently, & whilst deft. was still in occupation, the sanitary inspector of the district served upon the owners of the house an intimation under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 3, that the house was in such a state as to be a nuisance owing to the drain being defective. The owners gave notice to deft., & required him to do the work necessary to abate the nuisance. Upon deft. refusing to do so, the owners proceeded to do the work themselves at once without waiting to be served by the sanitary authority with a notice under sect. 4 of the Act requiring them to do the work. The expense incurred by them in doing the work amounted to £70 1*s.* 6*d.* In an action by the owners to recover that sum from deft. under his covenant to pay all outgoings :—Held : the action could not be maintained upon the grounds—(a) The owners having done the work immediately upon receipt of the intimation of the existence of the nuisance & before service of any notice requiring them to abate it, did it voluntarily, & not under any obligation, & the expenditure was consequently not an "outgoing" within the meaning of the covenant : & (b) Even if a covenant to pay outgoings would cover such an expenditure, it was not, having regard to the proportion which the expenditure bore to the yearly rent, a covenant which was applicable to a yearly tenancy, & deft. in holding over after the expiry of his term & paying rent could not be presumed to have intended to become a yearly tenant on the terms of such an obligation.—HARRIS v. HICKMAN, [1904] 1 K. 716. —— Work which sanitary authority ought to have done—Right of recovery from authority.]—Pltf. was tenant from year to year to defts. of a house in London, in which a nuisance arose by reason of water & sewage collecting in the cellar owing to a stoppage in the drains. The sanitary authority, acting under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 4 (1), served a notice at the premises directed to the owner or occupier, & requiring the nuisance to be abated ; they did not serve on the owner a notice under sect. 4, sub-sect. 3, which provides for the service on the owner of a notice to abate in cases where the nuisance arises from any want or defect of a structural character. Pltf., who under sect. 4, sub-sect. 4, was liable to a penalty of £10 if he made default in complying with the requisitions of the notice, did the necessary work, in the course of which it was discovered that the nuisance arose from a structural defect in the drains :—Held : (1) pltf. was entitled under sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, of the Act to recover from defts. the costs & expenses incurred in abating the nuisance as money paid by him for the use & at the request of defts., although no notice under sect. 4, sub-sect. 3, had been served upon defts. as owners of the premises ; (2) the costs & expenses incurred in carrying "the order" into effect must be taken to include the costs & expenses of carrying into effect the "notice" from the sanitary authority, although no "nuisance order" under sect. 5 had been obtained by the sanitary authority upon complaint to a petty sessional division.

717. —— —— ——.]—An owner of premises received a written intimation under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 3, duly signed by the officer of the sanitary authority, making known to him the existence of a nuisance at his premises & requesting him to abate the same within seven days otherwise the sanitary authority would commence proceedings against him by the service of a statutory notice. The owner, without waiting for the service of the statutory notice under sect. 4 of the Act requiring him to abate the nuisance, did the necessary works to abate the nuisance, in the course of which he discovered that the work was a sewer & not a drain, but without communicating with the sanitary authority he completed the work, & brought an action against the sanitary authority to recover the expenses as for work done by him under compulsion which the sanitary authority were legally compellable to do:—Held: work done under an "intimation" given under sect. 3, is not work done under compulsion, & as the owner had not waited for the statutory notice under sect. 4 but had done the work under the "intimation" notice, the work was not done by him under compulsion, & he was not entitled to recover the expenses of the work.—OLIVER v. CAMBERWELL BOROUGH COUNCIL (1904), 90 L. Work done under protest by person not liable—Right of recovery from person liable.]—A nuisance having arisen from the obstruction of a pipe which carried off the drainage from pltf.'s premises, defts.' sanitary inspector served on pltfs. an "intimation" notice under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), requiring them to abate the nuisance. Pltfs. contended, & it was the fact, that the pipe was a sewer, & therefore repairable, not by them, but by defts.; but pltfs. did the work necessary to abate the nuisance under protest, & sued defts. to recover the expense incurred by them in so doing as money paid by them under compulsion which defts. were compellable to pay:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover.—WILSON'S MUSIC & GENERAL PRINTING CO. v. FINSBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL, [1908] 1 K. 719. Nature & extent of works to be executed—Power to determine—In whom vested—Jurisdiction of justices to review determination.]—By the Public Health Act, 1848 (c. 63), s. 54, the surveyor of the Local Board of Health may examine any drain, water closet, privy, cesspool, or ash pit, & if it is in bad order & condition the Board shall cause notice in writing to be given to the owner or occupier of the premises, requiring him to do the necessary works; & if such notice be not complied with, the party shall be liable to a penalty for every day during which he makes default:—Held: the discretion to determine what works are necessary to be done is vested in the Board, &, on a proceeding before justices to recover the penalty under sect. 129, they have no jurisdiction to review its determination.—HARGREAVES v. TAYLOR (1863), 3 B. & S. 613; 1 New Rep. 472; 32 L. 720. Necessity for—On condition precedent to summons.]—Under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, s. 13, amended by Sanitary Act, 1866 (c. 90), part 2, a justice of the peace upon the complaint of any inhabitant of any parish or place of the existence of any nuisance on any private premises in the same parish or place, may issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission, or sufferance, the nuisance arises, etc., or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before justices, etc., without proof of the service of a previous notice to abate the nuisance.—COCKER v. CARDWELL (1869), L. 723. Definition of time for abatement—"Forthwith"—Whether sufficient.]—N. was duly served with notice under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 63), s. 94, to abate forthwith a nuisance arising from filth:—Held: the word "forthwith" meant within a reasonable time, & sufficiently defined the time for doing the work.—THOMAS v. NOKES (1894), 58 J. P. 672, D. C.

724. —— —— ——.]—A notice under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 94, requiring the abatement of a nuisance forthwith after the service of the notice sufficiently specifies the time, as required by that sect., within which the nuisance must be abated.—THOMAS v. WESTERN STEAM TRAWLING CO. (1894), 59 J. P. 232, D. C.

725. Necessity for specification of works to be done.]—By Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 94, the notice required under sect. 91 to abate a nuisance shall be a notice requiring the person causing the nuisance "to abate the same within a time to be specified in the notice, & to execute such works & do such things as may be necessary for that purpose." Resp. W. was summoned before the justices, under sect. 91 & subsequent sects., for permitting black smoke to be discharged from a chimney not being a chimney belonging to a private dwelling-house in such quantity as to be a nuisance. A preliminary objection was taken that the notice under the Act was bad on the ground that it did not set out the works required to be done in order to remedy the nuisance. The justices upheld the objection & dismissed the summons:—Held: the notice was quite sufficient, as no works were required to be done, but only the black smoke stopped.—MILLARD v. WASTALL, [1898] 1 Q. 726. ——.]—A notice was served on the owner of certain premises under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 94, requiring him to abate a nuisance arising from his allowing water to rise & accumulate in his cellar. The water came from a spring in the cellar. The notice continued: "& for that purpose to drain off the water, & to fill up the cellar, & to execute all such other works. & do all such other things as may be necessary for the abatement of the said nuisance":—Held: the notice was bad (RIDLEY, J.), on the ground that, although it need not set out the work to be done in detail, it ought to set out the character of the work to be done—namely, pumping, & not draining; (AVORY, J., & LUSH, J.), on the ground that it was ambiguous in that it might mean either that the owner was to effectively drain the water from the cellar or only to pump out the water then in the cellar.—WHATLING v. REES (1914), 84 L. C. Service of Notice.

(a) Who may Serve.

728. By, or by direction of, the sanitary authority—Notice given by inspector on his own initiative—Insufficient.]—A., the sanitary inspector of S., a metropolitan parish, gave a notice in his own name as inspector to H., an owner of a house, to reconstruct drains, etc., in three days, & afterwards, on default, A. did the work, & the S. vestry took out a summons against H. to recover the expenditure. No resolution of the vestry or of any committee thereof to give the notice was proved, but only a meeting of three members of a sub-committee who were proved to have met & resolved that the inspector should enter & execute the works himself:—Held: the notice given by the inspector was bad, & the statute not being complied with, the summons against H. was properly dismissed.—ST. 729. Power of metropolitan committee to act by agent—In vacation.]—The public health committee of a sanitary authority under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), appointed their chairman to deal with urgent matters during the vacation, & this act was approved by the sanitary authority. During the vacation the medical officer of health reported to the chairman the existence of a nuisance, & the chairman directed that under sect. 4 a notice to abate the nuisance should be served on the owner of the premises. The action of the chairman was approved by the committee at their first meeting after the vacation & likewise by the sanitary authority at their first meeting after the vacation. Subsequently to the last-mentioned meeting a complaint under sect. 5 was made against the owner by an inspector acting on behalf of the sanitary authority, & the magistrate made an order for the abatement of the nuisance. A bye-law of the sanitary authority provided that a chairman of a committee might, when the sanitary authority was in vacation, give instructions with respect to urgent matters, provided that such acts should be reported to the sanitary authority:—Held: the effect of the bye-law & of the ratification by the sanitary authority of the act of the committee in appointing the chairman to act in urgent matters was to constitute him their agent for the purpose of directing service of the notice to abate the nuisance, & as the act of the chairman had been ratified by the committee & the sanitary authority before the making of the complaint, the ratification related back to the time when the chairman directed the notice to be served & therefore the magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order.—R. v. CHAPMAN, Ex p. ARLIDGE, [1918] 2 K. (b) Who may be Served.

730. Person by whose act default or sufferance nuisance arises—Owner—Nuisance occurring in pipe draining several houses—Whether notice to one owner sufficient.]—A drain pipe passing through private property, & receiving & conveying to a public sewer the drainage of several houses belonging to different owners, is a "single private drain" within Public Health Acts (Amendment) Act, 1890 (c. 59), s. 19. A notice to the owner of one of the houses on whose land a nuisance, arising from the defective state of such a drain pipe, is found to exist, to abate the same & to execute certain works for that purpose, is a sufficient notice to throw upon him the duty of abating the nuisance, &, upon his default, to entitle the local authority to recover from him the expenses incurred by them in so doing. In such a case no notice need be given to the other owners, & the provisions of Public Health Acts (Amendment) Act, 1890 (c. 59), s. 19, as to apportionment of the expenses incurred by the local authority in executing the necessary works are not applicable. It appeared that the house to which the privy belonged was let by A. to H., for a term of years at a rack rent, & that applt. received the rent reserved by the lease as agent for the representatives of A. H. occupied the entrance or shop floor only, having underlet the residue of the premises, including the privy to a yearly tenant at a rack rent:—Held: applt. was not "owner" of the premises within the statutes as he did not receive

733. Owner compellable to execute work under Public Health Act, 1890 (c. 59), s. 19—Local authority adopting Act—Recovery of expenditure by owner.]—Two houses belonging to different owners were connected with a public sewer by a single private drain. The local authority of the district, who had adopted Public Health Act, 1890 (c. 59), served upon one of the owners a notice, under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), addressed to both, requiring them to abate a nuisance arising from the drain by doing certain works, & stating that, unless the nuisance were abated, the local authority would proceed to enforce the abatement & to recover costs & penalties. The owner upon whom such notice was served accordingly did the work, & brought an action against the local authority to recover the cost as money paid by her at their request:—Held: the notice given by defts. to pltf. was not a request to do the work which would support the action; no such request could be implied, because defts. were not themselves compellable to do the work, & under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 41, & Public Health Act, 1890 (c. 59), s. 19, could have compelled the owners to do it, & therefore that defts. were not liable.—SELF v. HOVE COMRS., [1895] 1 Q. 735. Work done by one owner—Right to recover share of expenses from adjoining owner.]—Where an adjoining owner does work on a common drain on his premises in pursuance of a sanitary notice, he cannot recover a proportion of the expenses of such work from his adjoining owner, although the drainage of such last-mentioned owner passes through such common drain & another notice has been served upon him in respect thereof.—REEVE v. SADLER (1903), 88 L. 736. —— ——.] — Defts.' premises were drained through a drain running under pltf.'s premises, which drain for part of its length carried only defts.' drainage, & for the rest of its length carried the drainage of both premises. Defts. had a right so to use the drain. A nuisance having arisen on pltf.'s premises owing to the whole of the drain being defective & permitting sewage to escape, the sanitary authority took proceedings against him, under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), ss. 4 & 5, & obtained an order upon him to do the work necessary to abate the nuisance. The pltf. did the work & abated the nuisance, all the work being done upon his own premises:—Held: pltf. could not recover from defts. a proportionate part of the costs of abating the nuisance as being one of two or more persons "by whose act or default" the nuisance had been caused, within Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 120.—NATHAN v. ROUSE, [1905] 1 K. 737. Sanitary authority liable to do necessary works—Recovery of expenditure by person not liable.]—The drainage of two adjoining houses situate in the metropolis being so defective as to be a nuisance, the sanitary authority served a notice under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 4 (1), upon the owner of the houses requiring him to abate the nuisance. The drainage of the houses was carried away by means of a single pipe, & the owner, being under the belief that this combined system of drainage had been authorised by an order of the sanitary authority, & that the liability to repair the pipe consequently lay upon him under the provisions of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), executed the works prescribed by the notice. In fact, the combined plan of drainage had not been authorised by any such order, & the liability to repair the pipe was by that Act imposed upon the sanitary authority. On discovery of the mistake he sought to recover from the sanitary authority the expense he had incurred:—Held: (1) as non-compliance with the notice would have rendered him primâ facie liable to a penalty under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 4 (4), he was practically compelled to do the work, & he could consequently recover the expense as money paid at the sanitary authority's request; (2) the "expenses of carrying the order into effect" mentioned in Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 11, include the expenses of doing work in obedience to an abatement notice, & consequently the owner, whether he was compelled to do the work or not, could under that sect. recover the expense from the sanitary authority as the persons by whose default the nuisance was caused.—ANDREW v. ST. 738. —— ——.]—Where a person is called upon by the sanitary authority to abate, & does abate, a nuisance by doing work which the sanitary authority themselves are liable to do, & where that person afterwards seeks to recover from them the cost of the work, upon the principle that, where one person is compelled to do work which another is legally compellable to do, the cost of the work may be recovered by the one as money paid at the other's request, regard must be had to the fact that in the case of a nuisance prompt action by some one is imperative; & because of that fact it is not necessary to show that there was actual, direct, or irresistible compulsion in order to bring the case within the principle above enunciated. It is sufficient to show that the sanitary authority took steps which practically amounted to compulsion.—NORTH v. WALTHAMSTOW URBAN COUNCIL (1898), 67 L. J. Q. B. 972 ; 62 J. P. 836 ; 15 T. L. 739. Summons to answer complaint — What court has jurisdiction to hear—Justices for area of origin of nuisance.]—Under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 12, the power of a local authority to prefer, & the jurisdiction of justices to determine, a complaint in respect of a nuisance existing within the area of that local authority, arises only where the cause of such nuisance is also within that area. I. C. & co., brewers of R., a parish within the area of a local board of health, drained their brewery into the river there, & thereby caused a nuisance lower down in the river, at D., a parish within the jurisdiction of another local authority. The local authority for D. having preferred a complaint before justices against I. C. & co. in respect of such nuisance :—Held : the justices had no jurisdiction, the origin of the nuisance not being within the area of the local authority for D.—R. v. COTTON (1858), 1 E. & E. 203 ; 28 L. (2) Such a summons is a "document" within the meaning of the words "notice, order, or other document" in Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 128, & may therefore be properly served by delivering it to some person on the premises.—R. v. MEAD, [1894] 2 Q. After respts.' case had been closed, applts. gave evidence that the nuisance might have been due to two furnace doors being open at one time, & required under Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 5 (5), that the order should specify the works to be executed by them. They objected, however, to any further evidence being given on the part of resps., on the ground that their case was closed. The magistrate, without hearing further evidence, made a prohibition order directing applts. to fit up apparatus to prevent the doors being left open simultaneously, & to adopt all other means necessary to prevent the emission of black smoke in such quantities as to be a nuisance :—Held : the order was good, & it was not necessary, under the circumstances, that it should specify the works to be executed for the purpose of preventing the recurrence of the nuisance.

The law laid down in Millard v. Wastall, No. 725, ante, with reference to Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), ss. 94 & 96, that a notice to abate a nuisance caused by quantities of black smoke issuing from a factory chimney need not necessarily specify the works required to be done in order to abate the nuisance, has not been substantially altered by Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (c. 76), s. 5 (5), which requires that a prohibition order shall, if the person on whom the order is made so requires, specify the works to be done.—CENTRAL LONDON RY. 768. Whether appeal lies — From abatement order—Not being an order to do structural works.]—The drainage from a gaol in the township of W., which is out of the borough of L., built there by the corpn. of L., & duly declared to be the common gaol of that borough, was carried thence by open drains over land in the township of B. not belonging to the corpn., & caused a nuisance in B. The corpn. of L. was thereupon summoned by the nuisances removal committee of B. under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121):—Held: the corpn. of L., & not the justices having the management of the gaol, were the proper persons to be summoned & ordered to do what was necessary under that Act.

It appeared before the magistrates at the return of the summons that the nuisance could only be abated by constructing a covered drain of some length through the township of B.; & thereupon the magistrates ordered the corpn. "within three months to abate & discontinue the nuisance, & to do such works & acts as are necessary to abate the same, & to pay £20 costs":—Held: the order was one to abate the nuisance under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), ss. 12 & 13, & not an order to do structural works, & therefore, that it could not be appealed against under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 16.

The order, not having been obeyed, & the quarter sessions having dismissed an appeal against it, on the ground that no appeal lay, the nuisances removal committee obtained a second order under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), ss. 14 & 20, for penalties for not obeying the first order, & for the costs adjudged by the first order:—Held: a valid order.—Ex p. LIVERPOOL CORPN. SUB-SECT. 6.—NON-COMPLIANCE WITH ORDERS.

A. In General.

770. Necessity for evidence as to cause of repetition of nuisance—As condition precedent to conviction.]—Upon an information against applt. for a nuisance through a chimney sending forth black smoke, an order was made on July 20, 1868, that within two months he should make such alterations in the chimney, etc., so as to consume the smoke arising therefrom. Applt. thereupon made certain alterations & the smoke ceased to issue until the following Feb. 4, when for a certain limited period on that day & following days it again issued. In the following July an information was laid for disobedience to the said order. No evidence was given as to the cause of the issuing of the smoke, & the justices convicted applt.:—Held: (1) there was evidence justifying the conviction; (2) as the nuisance was a continuing one Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 11, did not apply.—HIGGINS v. NORTHWICH UNION GUARDIANS (1870), 22 L. T. 752; 34 J. P. 806.

771. Disobedience to two separate orders—Whether one act of disobedience will support two convictions.]—On Mar. 11, 1871, an order of justices was made on applt. & his partner, in the trade of a dyer, to cease to send forth black smoke from a certain chimney, under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 12, with liberty to the informant to enter on default & do what was necessary to execute the order. On Mar. 14, 1874, a further order was made under the same section that they should discontinue the nuisance, & that its recurrence should be prohibited. On May 1, 1875, applt. was convicted under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 13, for disobeying the order of abatement of Mar. 11, 1871, & on the same day was also convicted of disobeying the order of prohibition of Mar. 14, 1874. Both convictions proceeded on the evidence that on a certain day black smoke issued from applt.'s chimney:—Held: both convictions could not be maintained.—EDDLESTON v. BARNES (1875), 1 Ex. D. 67; sub nom. EDLESTON v. BARNES, 45 L. J. M. C. 73; 34 L. T. 497; 40 J. P. 88, D. C.

772. Order made under statute — Disobedience after repeal of statute.]—By Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 343, which came into force on Aug. 11, 1875, Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), & Sanitary Act, 1866 (c. 90), are repealed with a proviso that "this repeal shall not affect any right or liability acquired, accrued, or incurred under any enactment hereby repealed." An order, under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), & Sanitary Act, 1866 (c. 90), to discontinue the sending forth of black smoke from a certain chimney in such quantity as to be a nuisance was made by justices & served on resp. on May 24, 1875. On Aug. 12, 1875, black smoke was emitted from the chimney in such quantity as to be a nuisance. Resp. having been summoned before justices for a disobedience of the order, they dismissed the summons upon the ground that the statutes under which the order was made had been repealed on Aug. 11:—Held: the order was a "liability" within the proviso in Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 343, it continued in force notwithstanding the repeal of the statutes under which it was made, & the decision of the justices was erroneous.—BARNES v. EDDLESTON (1876), 1 Ex. 773. Order to local authority to abate on default of abatement by owner—Failure of local authority to carry out order—Whether owner exempted from penalty.]—An order to abate a nuisance by removing offensive privies, etc., was directed to "the owner or to the nuisance removal committee," the owner being directed to remove the same within seven days, & if such order were not complied with, the committee were authorised & required to enter & remove it. The seven days elapsed, & neither the owner nor committee removed the nuisance :—Held : the justices had power to fine the owner, under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 14, for disobedience of the order, notwithstanding that it was addressed to the nuisance committee as well as to the owner.—TOMLINS v. GREAT STANMORE NUISANCE REMOVAL COMMITTEE (1865), 12 L. 776. —— Owner's permission must first be obtained.]—Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 102, provides that a local authority or any of their officers "shall be admitted into any premises for the purpose of examining as to the existence of any nuisance thereon," & if admission is refused application may be made to a magistrate for an order to admit.

By Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 306, any person who wilfully obstructs any member of a local authority in the execution of the Act is liable to a penalty.

Members of applt. council, purporting to act under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 102, entered a yard on resp.'s premises in his absence without having first requested or obtained his permission so to do, &, while there, were locked in by resp. :—Held : Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 102, does not authorise an entry on private premises without the permission of the occupier being first requested ; the members of applt. council while on the premises of resp. were, therefore, not engaged in the execution of the Act ; & resp. had not committed an offence under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 306.—CONSETT URBAN COUNCIL v. CRAWFORD, [1903] 2 K. The sanitary officer under the local board of health, at the instance of a person aggrieved, obtained an order of justices, requiring P. to cleanse a drain. P. did not obey the order, & the local board refused to take any steps to enforce it :—Held : the party aggrieved was not entitled to a mandamus to the local board to compel them to abate the nuisance under Nuisances Removal Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 14.—Ex p. BASSETT (1857), 7 E. & B. 280 ; 21 J. On May 29 the owner abroad executed a power of attorney to receive the rents to W. in this country, who received it upon July 22 & acted upon it. 787. Person doing or authorising act from which nuisance arises.]—A person kept an inclosed ground, near several inhabited houses, for profit, in causing it to be used by others for amusement, in firing at a target & shooting pigeons. This practice collected a number of vagabonds outside, who resorted thither for the purpose of firing at such birds as were missed, or only partially wounded by those who fired in the inclosure. These latter persons fired near the highway in all directions; &, most of them being unskilful, they caused much danger to the passengers & the inhabitants of the adjoining houses:—Held: the person who kept the inclosed ground was liable to be indicted for a nuisance, although the persons without had collected against his will; their collecting being a natural, if not an inevitable consequence of his act for his own profit.—R. v. MOORE (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 184; 1 L. SUB-SECT. 4.—DEFENCES.

796. Benefit to public outweighing inconvenience.]—Upon the trial of an indictment for a nuisance in a navigable river, by erecting staiths there for loading ships with coals, the jury were directed by the judge to acquit defts. if they thought that the abridgment of the right of passage occasioned by these erections was for a public purpose, & produced a public benefit, & if the erections were in a reasonable situation, & a reasonable space was left for the passage of vessels on the river; & he pointed out to the jury that by means of the staiths coals were supplied at a cheaper rate, & in better condition, than they otherwise could be, which was a public benefit:—Held: this direction to the jury was proper.—R. v. RUSSELL (1827), 6 B. & C. 566; 9 Dow. & Ry. 797. ——.]—On the trial of an indictment for a nuisance in a navigable river & common Kings' highway, called the harbour of C., by erecting an embankment in the waterway, a finding by the jury that the embankment was a nuisance, but that the inconvenience was counterbalanced by the public benefit arising from the alteration, amounts to a verdict of guilty. It is no defence to such an indictment, that, although the work be in some degree a hindrance to navigation, it is advantageous, in a greater degree, to other uses of the port.—R. v. WARD (1836), 4 Ad. & El. 384; 1 Har. & W. 703; 6 Nev. & M. 798. Wrongful act of third person—Removal of market—Indictment for erecting stall in old market place.]—A person indicted for a nuisance in erecting a stall in the old market place after a wrongful removal of the market, may set up the wrongfulness of the removal as a defence, & need not proceed by sci. fa. to repeal the grant of the market.—R. v. STARKEY (1837), 7 Ad. & El. 95; 2 Nev. & P. 802. —— Whether must be included in judgment.]—The ct. will not quash a return to a mandamus, which directed an inferior ct. to give judgment on an indictment, merely because it states an erroneous judgment given below. Semble: on an indictment for a nuisance in erecting a wall across a road, not for continuing the nuisance, it is not necessary to adjudge that the nuisance be abated.—R. v. WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE JJ. 803. —— Necessity for presence of accused.]—Where deft. indicted for a nuisance in obstructing a navigable river, allows judgment to go by default, & is under no recognisances to appear in the Q. B. for judgment, the ct. will not in his absence give judgment that the nuisance be abated, though notice has been left at his residence of the intention of the Crown to pray for judgment; the proper course being to sue out a writ of capias & proceed to outlawry.—R. v. CHICHESTER (1851), 17 Q. 805. Costs of party grieved on removal.]—Persons dwelling near to a steam engine, which emitted volumes of smoke, affecting their breath, eyes, clothes, furniture, & dwelling-houses, & prosecuting an indictment for it, are parties grieved, entitled to have their costs taxed under 5 & 6 Will. & Mar. c. 11, s. 3, upon removal of the indictment by certiorari from the sessions into this ct. by defts., & their subsequent conviction.—R. v. DEWSNAP (1812), 16 East, 194; 104 E. R.

SUB-SECT. 8.—OTHER CASES.

806. Effect of pardon—Punishment & order for abatement—Whether abatement excused.]—Fine pardoned by general pardon, but abatement not excused.

The owner of the glass house at Lambeth was indicted for maintaining that house being a nuisance & was convicted & fined; & now it was moved that by the act of general pardon deft. was excused & discharged both as to the fine & the abatement of the nuisance; but the ct. upon consideration held that he should be discharged only as to the fine & not as to the abatement, for that is not a punishment of the party, but a removal of that which is a grievance to other people, & any person may abate a common nuisance.—R. v. WILCOX (1690), 2 Salk. 458; 91 E.

2. —— ——.] — Pltfs., the Improvement Comrs. of the river T., acquired certain lands & constructed a pier under statutory powers, the work being done at intervals between the years & 1891. The public were in the habit of using the pier as a promenade & for various purposes of pleasure & recreation, & pltfs. alleged that they never desired nor intended to prevent the public from so using it as a matter of favour. Finding, however, that a claim as of right was being set up, pltfs. on Dec. 21, 1897, placed barriers across the landward end of the pier, & ordered the pier to be closed for twenty-four hours. Thereupon the mayor & other officers of the adjoining borough of S. S., being refused admission, broke down the barriers & also certain permanent gates across the pier. Pltfs. now sued them for the trespass. At the same time an action was brought against the comrs. in the name of the A.-G. alleging that the said pier & the several parts thereof had been from time to time dedicated to the use of & accepted by the public as a common & public highway, & had been & were used by the public for the purposes of bathing, boating, fishing, embarking, disembarking, recreation, & other lawful purposes, with power to stray on & off the sands at the side of the pier, & alleging, in the alternative, a lost grant to the mayor, aldermen & burgesses of S. S. for the benefit of themselves & the inhabitants of S. S., & claiming a declaration that the public & the inhabitants of S. S. were entitled to exercise such right of way & such other rights:—Held: (1) an owner might dedicate his land for purposes of recreation; (2) a licence to stray on & off a right of way required such a case to prove it that it could practically never be proved.—TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. v. IMRIE, A.-G. v. TYNE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. 4. How far right may be acquired by custom.]—Evidence that in a place of resort for pleasure, as a wood, or the like, people have gone about wherever they pleased, there being no definite enduring trackway in any particular direction, but merely temporary & transitory tracks, not passable in wet weather & varying every season & never proved to be repaired:—Held: not evidence on which a jury could properly find either a public highway or a public right of resort for air & exercise, or a prescriptive right of way.—SCHWINGE v. DOWELL (1862), 2 F. & F. 845, N. P.

5. ——.]—Gifts for Churches Act, 1811 (c. 115), s. 2, does not empower the lord of a manor to grant a portion of the waste land of the manor, which is a village green, freed from the parishioners' customary right to the use of it, as such, & a demurrer by the vicar of St. M. E., in the manor of B., the grantee of the ecclesiastical comrs., lords of the manor, to a bill by one of the parishioners of B. to establish their right to the village green, & set aside the grant of it, was overruled.—FORBES v. ECCLESIASTICAL COMRS. 6. —— Reasonable use only.] — Under a claim of right by a custom for all the inhabitants of a parish, evidence that a party claiming such right rented a tenement within the parish, which he used occasionally, though he did not actually reside within the parish, will support the custom. Where a party claims a right to use a piece of ground belonging to another for a lawful purpose, he must use it for such purpose in a lawful & proper way, otherwise he will be considered a trespasser.—FITCH v. FITCH (1797), 2 Esp. 541; 170 E. 9. —— ——.]—The ct. will not readily infer dedication to the public. Where a corpn. purchased 53 acres, 40 of which were intended to be used as a public park, the ct. would not infer dedication of the whole of the 53 acres simply because the remaining 13 acres were not fenced off & were used by the public as part of the park.—A.-G. v. BRADFORD CORPN. 14. —— ——.]—What we have to determine is whether or not the dedication of the land to public purposes, so that the use of it for any purpose must be a use subordinate to the public purposes to which the park or recreation ground is in its whole devoted, excludes those in whom the land is legally vested from the category of owners within Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 250. The fact that the legal owners have no beneficial ownership, but are merely trustees, does not by the very terms of the sect. exclude them from the category of owners. Does the fact that they are trustees exclude them? I have come to the conclusion that it does (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. WANDSWORTH BOROUGH COUNCIL, [1903] 1 K. In pursuance of statutory powers to make bye-laws for regulating the times during which the park should be open & the prices of admission on any special occasion provided that the park should not be closed for more than seven days in any year, the corpn. made a bye-law providing that the park might be closed for not more than seven days in any year, & that on such days they might charge any sum not exceeding 5*s.* for each person for admission. of T. & P. respectively, being tenants in common in fee of the land & houses forming a square in London, with the garden in the middle, a decree in Chancery for a partition was obtained, & a commission issued. The Comrs. certified that the land & houses on the north side should be allotted to the P.s in fee, & the land & houses on the other three sides, together with the garden, to the T.s in fee; that the lessees of houses, etc., on the north side should continue to pay to the owners of the second allotment the sum reserved in their leases towards keeping up the square garden; & that the owners of the second allotment should for ever keep & maintain the garden in its then state as a pleasure ground. A decree was then made that the estates should be held in severalty as allotted by the certificate; & mutual conveyances were executed accordingly, which recited the decrees & certificate; but there was no covenant on the part of the owners of the second allotment to keep up the square garden. At the time of the partition most of the leases granted by the original coparceners, under whom T. & P. claimed, were in existence, & the last lease did not expire till 1847, & in the leases there were covenants by the lessees to pay certain small annual sums towards keeping up the square gardens, & covenants on the part of the lessors to apply them to that purpose. In 1807, J., the then tenant for life, & his son, C., the tenant in tail in remainder, of the property in the second allotment, executed a conveyance, which was carried out by a recovery, by which C., the son, took in fee the hereditaments on the east & partly south side of the square & the square garden, & J. took the hereditaments on the west & the the rest of the south side, & C. covenanted for himself, his heirs, etc., with J., his heirs, etc., for ever after to keep the square garden in its then state, & in good repair, etc. In 1808, C. conveyed the square garden in fee to E., who covenanted with C., etc., to keep the garden in its then state, & that it should be lawful for J. & C., & their respective tenants, inhabitants of the square, on payment of a reasonable sum, to have keys & admission at all times into the garden. Up to 1851 the garden was constantly used as a promenade & place of recreation by such of the inhabitants of the square as chose to pay a guinea or a guinea & a half per annum to the owners for the time being of the garden, for keys. After several mesne assignments, in 1851, the garden became vested in fee in W., who proposed to erect a building in it. L., the devisee from J. of all his share in the property conveyed to him by the deed of 1807, & the owners of most of the property in the square comprised in that deed, opposed this, & by an agreement between them & W. they granted him a licence to erect & maintain the proposed building for ten years, provided that the licence should not operate as a waiver of the covenants in the deeds of 1807 & 1808; & W. covenanted to restore the garden at the end of the ten years to its former state. At the end of the ten years W. removed the building, & pltf., who was also joint devisee under the will of L. of J.'s share, as heir-at-law of L., exercised an option, given to L. in the agreement of 1851, of purchasing an undivided moiety of the garden; & the garden accordingly, by a deed of 1861, became vested in the pltf. & W. as tenants in common in fee. The owners of the houses on the north side of the square were no parties to any dealing with the garden. In 1865, the garden being in a neglected & dilapidated state, the Metropolitan Board of Works took possession of it, under above Act, s. 1. Pltf. having brought an action of trespass against the Board:—Held: whatever might be the rights at law or in equity of the owners & occupiers of the houses round the square, the garden had not been set apart for the use or enjoyment of the inhabitants of the square otherwise than by the revocable permission of the owner, within the meaning of the above sect., & consequently the Board were trespassers. Qu.: whether the case was within sect. 2 of the Act.—TULK v. METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS (1868), L. 30. —— Against motor traffic in park.]—Between the years 1853 & 1861, five lots, part of a larger area of land which had been purchased for providing a public park for the benefit of the inhabitants of Bradford, were sold off for private residences & were conveyed to the respective purchasers "together with a right of carriage, horse & footway" through the park when laid out, but subject to such bye-laws, rules, & regulations as should from time to time be made by those having the control of the park for the purpose of (inter alia) "promoting safety & for establishing & maintaining the character of the park as a place of public recreation." Each of the lots had a carriage way entrance on its southern side into the park & on its northern side into a public road. In 1863, the remainder of the land, known as Peel Park, containing fifty-eight acres, was conveyed to the Bradford Corpn. subject to the rights of way so granted. In July, 1907, the corpn. under the powers of a local Act made a bye-law prohibiting motor cars or other similar mechanically drawn vehicles from using the park. In 1920, deft. purchased one of the five lots & then disputed the validity of the bye-law & asserted a right under the grant in the original conveyance of his lot to drive his motor car through the park. Subsequently, in order to obviate any objection that their existing bye-law was only made under their statutory power, the corpn. "as the body having control of Peel Park & for the purpose of promoting safety & for establishing & maintaining the character of the park as a place of public recreation," made a further bye-law prohibiting any motor car or other similar mechanically drawn vehicle from passing through any part of the park to or from any of the houses on the lots in question. Before passing this bye-law the Parks Committee, after consideration, determined that it was necessary in the interests of public safety to prevent the owners of the lots from driving motor vehicles over the roadways of the park. The ct. in granting an injunction against deft.:—Held: (1) the right of carriage way was not restricted to carriages impelled by any particular kind of traction, & a motor car was within the meaning of the grant; (2) the bye-laws which had been made by the corpn. in the interests of public safety & in exercise of its two-fold power, under the statute & the deed of conveyance, were not unreasonable but were valid.—A.-G. v. HODGSON, [1922] 2 Ch. 429; 91 L. 32. Bye-law restraining acts without consent—Discretion as to consent to be exercised judicially.]—The London County Council, in exercise of statutory powers, made a bye-law relating to parks, gardens, & open spaces whereby the selling of any article without the consent in writing of the Council was constituted an offence. A local authority have no power to apply permanently land which they have acquired for one purpose to another purpose inconsistent with the original purpose, even though the land cannot possibly be required for that original purpose, & they will be restrained from so doing at the suit of the A.-G. & the landowner from whom the land not required was purchased.

Suppose a local authority acquired land compulsorily under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 175, for the purpose of a public recreation ground, & within a year afterwards a neighbouring landowner should offer them a free gift of other land equally or more convenient for the purpose of a recreation ground, & they should accept it, so that the land originally purchased would be no longer required for the purpose, & under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 175, they would be obliged to sell it, "Unless the Local Government Board otherwise direct." Can it be suggested that the Board, by relieving them from the obligation to sell the land, could empower them to turn into a sewage farm that land which was bought for the purpose of a recreation ground? So to hold would be to allow a subsidiary clause contained in a parenthesis in Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 175, to defeat the whole scheme of Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 176 (COLLINS, L.J.).—A.-G. v. HANWELL URBAN COUNCIL, [1900] 2 Ch. 377; 69 L. 42. Custom to use ground as cricket ground—User for cattle-fair—Construction of local Act.]—By a local Act of Parliament, passed for improving the marsh & other common lands, & extending rights of common & recreation within the town of S., reciting that a certain portion of the marsh lands consisting of 4 acres was better adapted for the purposes of recreation than the other portions of the marsh; it was enacted that rights of common & recreation should not be extinguished, & that the said 4 acres should for ever thereafter be subject to such rights of common & of recreation, & other public rights "as had theretofore been exercised & enjoyed thereon." By the same Act it was provided that, "except as therein otherwise provided," all the waste lands which were then vested in the corpn. should remain subject to the existing rights of common & recreation, & such powers were given to the corpn. to fence, drain & manage the said lands as they should think proper for the public advantage of the inhabitants. The corpn. were also empowered to remove a fair to such parts of the waste lands as they should think fit. In the exercise of their discretion the corpn. removed the fair to the 4 acres above-mentioned, which were called "the cricket ground," & had theretofore been used for the purpose of playing cricket:—Held: on the construction of the Act, the corpn., by so doing, had contravened the powers of the Act; & perpetual injunction to restrain them from holding the fair on the cricket ground granted, with costs.—A.-G. v. SOUTHAMPTON CORPN. 43. Public have no rights of user—Except by favour of Crown.]—35 & 36 Vict. c. 15, s. 4, gives summary jurisdiction for the conviction of any person doing an act in contravention of any regulation in the schedule. By 35 & 36 Vict. c. 15, s. 9, any rules made in pursuance of the schedule, when Parliament is not sitting, shall be laid before both Houses within three weeks after the beginning of the next Session, & any rules or parts thereof as shall be disapproved shall not be enforced. Regulation 8 of the schedule provides that no person shall deliver or invite any person to deliver any public address in a park except in accordance with the rules of the park; & regulations 19 & 20 provide for the making & issuing rules of the park by the ranger & comrs. Rules of Hyde Park were issued on Oct. 1, 1872, the Act having passed on June 27, & the last Session having concluded on Aug. 10. One of the rules was that no public address of an unlawful character, or for an unlawful purpose, may be delivered; another, that no public address may be delivered except upon certain conditions. Applt. having infringed these conditions in delivering a public address of a lawful character in Hyde Park, was convicted by a magistrate:—Held: (1) these rules were in force, although not laid before Parliament; this Act assumes that the parks are the property of the Crown, & the public have no rights of user except by favour of the Crown; the rules were within the authority of the Act; & the conviction was valid; (2) the rules were properly authenticated by the joint signature of two several officials, though each had authority only to make rules on particular points.—BAILEY v. WILLIAMSON (1873), L. SUB-SECT. 2.—TIME FOR APPEAL.

See, now, Standing Orders of the House of Lords (Judicial Business), 1926, No. 1.

25. Appeal out of time entertained if connected with subsequent order.]—By the Standing Order of the House of Lords of Mar. 24, 1726 (No. 118), as amended in 1829, no petition of appeal from any decree or sentence of any ct, of equity in England or Ireland, shall be received by the House after two years from the enrolling of the same, & the end of the next session ensuing the said two years, unless the person entitled to such appeal be under the age of twenty-one years, or covert, non compos mentis, imprisoned, or out of Great Britain or Ireland, in which case such person may bring his appeal within two years after such disability ceased, & the end of the next session of Parliament ensuing the two years, but in no case shall any person be allowed a longer time, on account of mere absence, to lodge an appeal, than five years from the date of the last decree or order appealed against:—Held: an appeal lodged Feb. 18, 1836, against a decree dated April 26, & enrolled June 14, 1832, was irregular, as not being within time, although applt. had been absent abroad in consequence of embarrassment & illness of his wife, & was advised & believed he might appeal at any time within five years from the date of the enrolment of the decree, & although his appeal had been received & appointed for hearing; the said appeal was saved by being extended to subsequent orders in the same cause, the appeal from these orders being brought within two years from the enrolling of them.—DE BURGH v. CLARKE (1837), 4 Cl. & Fin. 562; 7 E. 27. ——.]—When there is a competent appeal from an order made within the year, there is nothing in the Standing Orders or in the practice of the House in regard to appeals to prevent the House from entertaining an appeal from a previous order which is so connected with the later order as properly to form the subject of one & the same appeal, if the previous order is in an appealable condition, if it does not belong to a stage in the proceedings which has been definitely passed, or to a chapter in the litigation which may fairly be regarded as closed, & if it is clear that the appeal will not lead to additional inquiries & further expense (LORD MACNAGHTEN). — CONCHA v. CONCHA, [1892] A. 28. —— House may extend time in exceptional cases.]—It has hardly been contested that the words "last decree, order, judgment or interlocutor appealed from" in the Standing Order of this House cannot enable an applt. practically to commence an appeal after the lapse of twelve months against a party who is wholly unaffected by the subsequent decree or order & the only ground upon which we have been urged to entertain the appeal against Mary Fothergill is that it is a case of hardship & that there are grounds for extending the time. But certainly it would only be on some extremely exceptional & extraordinary ground that the Standing Order would be suspended, if it ever could be suspended at all (per CUR).—PHILLIPS v. FOTHERGILL (1886), 11 App. Cas. 466; on appeal from S. 29. When time begins to run — From enrolment of decree—Not from pronouncement.]—(1) It seems that where the Order of an Appeal Committee is desired to be re-heard, the re-hearing cannot in strictness take place without notice.

(2) Though a party may for convenience sake be allowed to argue against the decision of an Appeal Committee without having given such notice, it must be on the understanding that he is to present a petition to be heard against the allowance of the petition of appeal.

(3) The time limited by the Standing Order Mar. 24, 1726, for the presenting of petitions of appeal, begins to run from the enrolment of a decree of a Ct. of Equity, & not from the period when that decree was pronounced.

The enrolment does not relate backwards so as to prevent, by the effect of relation, this construction of the Standing Order. Where, therefore, a decree which had been pronounced in 1821 was not enrolled till 1836, the Appeal Committee received the petition of appeal, & the House confirmed its decision.—BROOKE v. CHAMPERNOWNE (1837), 4 Cl. & Fin. 247; 7 E. R. 95, H. L.

Annotation:—As to (3) Refd. Beavan v. Mornington (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 525.

30. Statutory appeals — With time limited by statute—Matrimonial cause.]—Since the Judicature Act, 1881 (c. 68), an appeal to the House of Lords in a matrimonial cause, where an appeal lies, can only be from a decision of the Ct. of Appeal; & such an appeal must be brought within one month after the decision appealed against is pronounced by the Ct. of Appeal if the House of Lords is then sitting, or if not, within fourteen days after the House of Lords next sits.

It seems to me that the Standing Order does not apply to the case at all. It says that with that exception mentioned [exception provided by statute] no petition of appeal shall be received unless lodged within a year. It does not say that the petition shall be received if it is presented within a year, in any case in which an Act of Parliament has provided that a petition of appeal shall only be received if it is lodged within a shorter time (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—CLEAVER v. CLEAVER (1884), 9 App. Cas. 631, H. SUB-SECT. 3.—WHEN APPEAL LIES.

32. Not on mere point of practice or procedure.]—(1) Where a case has been ordered by the Appeal Committee to be argued before the House upon the question of the competency of the appeal, the House may or not, at its discretion, permit a reply.

(2) An appeal on a mere point of practice is not competent.

(3) Where a ct. has treated one of its own proceedings as merely interlocutory & not final, that circumstance is decisive of the nature of such proceeding.—FERRIER v. HOWDEN (1834), 4 Cl. & Fin. 25; 7 E. R. 10, H. L.

38. —— Order as to costs founded on error in law.]—The rule of the House of Lords as to appeals for costs, while it prevents the House from entertaining an appeal for costs on the mere ground that the discretion of the ct. has been wrongly exercised, does not prevent it from entertaining such appeal on the ground that the order is founded on an error of law.—CAMPBELL (DONALD) & CO., LTD. v. POLLAK (1927), 43 T. L. R. 495; 71 Sol. Jo. 450, H. L.

39. —— Reconsideration of costs if appeal on merits of case.]—The rule with respect to costs in the House of Lords, as in the Privy Council, & in Chancery, is, that one cannot appeal for costs alone, but if an appeal be brought on the merits, not on colourable grounds of appeal, for the purpose of raising the question of costs, the House will not treat that as an appeal for costs, but will even, in affirming the judgment of the ct. below, consider the question of costs as fairly raised, & where there is hardship on applt., will reverse so much of the judgment of the ct. below as gave costs against him.—INGLIS v. MANSFIELD (1835), 3 Cl. & Fin. 362; 6 E. 40. —— ——.]—An appeal for mere costs does not lie, yet if an appeal is brought on a substantial question, not colourable, the House may deal with the costs awarded by the ct. below. Accordingly, in an appeal which appeared to the House to have been brought for costs, but in which the order appealed from was varied materially, in favour of applt., by the correction of an error, which, however, he might have prevented by a mere suggestion to the ct. below:—Held: applt. is not, on the ground of that variation, entitled to be absolved from costs; but, under the circumstances, the appeal was dismissed without costs.—M'AULAY v. ADAM (1835), 3 Cl. & Fin. 385; 6 E. R. 1481.

41. —— Except in case of appeal by officer of Crown.]—(1) Where the Crown, by any of its officers, is a party resp. in an appeal, it is not the usage of the House of Lords to allow the counsel for the Crown a general reply, after the reply for applt.

(2) The Lord Advocate of Scotland, or other officer of the Crown, suing on behalf of the Crown, or in matters in which the Crown is interested, is not liable to pay costs to the opposite party even though the suit may have been improperly instituted.

(3) Against any judgment awarding such costs an appeal may be brought, notwithstanding the general rule that no appeal lies for costs.—LORD ADVOCATE v. DUNGLAS (LORD), DUNGLAS (LORD) v. OFFICERS OF STATE FOR SCOTLAND (1841), 9 Cl. & Fin. 173; 4 State Tr. N. S. 737; 8 E. 381, H. L.

66. Consideration of competency of appeal.]—(1) The circumstance that a person has been made a party to a suit in the ct. below, if improperly so made, will not entitle him to appeal to this House against a decree made in that suit.

(2) An objection to the competency of an appeal ought to have been presented to the Appeal Committee, but was not noticed till the case came on for hearing at the bar of this House: the objection was in its nature fatal. The House therefore dismissed the appeal, but, because the objection had not been taken till so late a period, dismissed it without costs.—ROCHFORT v. BATTERSBY (1849), 2 H. L. SUB-SECT. 7.—THE HEARING.

A. In General.

70. House may remit for further inquiry—& direct consequential inquiries.]—The House, in remitting a cause for inquiry on a main question, will, to save delay & expense, direct inquiries on other questions consequential on the probable finding on the main question.—JACKSON v. JACKSON (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 977; West, 575; 7 E. R. 1338, H. L.

71. Case remitted to carry out directions of House—Direction stated on face of order.]—The House, in remitting a cause to the ct. below to carry its directions into effect, will, where necessary, not merely declare the principle of its order, but state those directions fully on the face of the order.—M'CAN v. O'FERRALL (1841), 8 Cl. & Fin. 30; West, 593; 8 E. R. 12, H. L.

72. —— ——.]—In an appeal by the workman from an order of the Ct. of Appeal affirming a decision of a county ct. judge, the question was whether a rule made in accordance with General Colliery Regulations, r. 25a, under powers given in Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 86, "that no person below ground shall ride upon any tub or contrivance drawn by a horse" so affected the miner's employment that disobedience to the rule was an act on his part outside the sphere of his employment, & an accident which was due to that act was one for which the employer was not liable:—Held: there should be a fuller & more specific statement of the facts than was contained in the considered judgment of the county ct. judge, & the Ct. of Appeal were wrong in not directing a new trial. The case was accordingly remitted for a new trial with a special direction as to costs.—MAYDEW v. CHATTERLEY-WHITFIELD COLLIERIES, LTD. (1918), 88 L. J. K. B. 360; 119 L. T. 262; 11 B. W. C. 74. Objection to competency of appeal—Whether entertained—Failure to present objection to appeal committee.]—ROCHFORT v. BATTERSBY, No. 66, ante.

75. —— —— Maintenance by Crown.]—A preliminary objection to the competency of the appeal based on the fact that the Crown had provided applt. (pltf.) with the means of prosecuting his appeal, in order to get the question of the validity of the regulations finally settled, is untenable.—MACKEY v. MONKS (PRESTON), [1918] A. C. 59; 87 L. J. P. C. 28; 118 L. T. 65; 82 J. P. 105, H. L.

76. Conclusion that there was no evidence for jury—Judgment for defendant—Although no cross appeal by defendant.]—Where the House of Lords comes to the conclusion that there is no evidence to go to a jury in an action, they will order judgment to be entered for deft., & not send the case for a new trial; & this will be done though there is no cross appeal on deft.'s part.—IBO SYNDICATE, LTD. v. WYLER (1902), 87 L. 83. —— Only in special circumstances.] — (1) All objections to the form & competency of an appeal to this House, should be made before the appeal is set down for hearing, so that it may be referred to the Appeal Committee.

(2) Although the time for appealing from an interlocutory order in a cause has expired, still if the final decree is appealed from in time, the right to appeal from the order is saved.

(3) This House may, under circumstances, depart from the general rule, &, to satisfy its conscience, look into instruments that were not tendered to the judge who made the decree appealed against.—ATTWOOD v. SMALL (1838), 6 Cl. & Fin. 232 ; 7 E. 88. —— Except in very exceptional circumstances.]—Observations on the practice of the House as to permitting parties to raise points of law not raised in the cts. below.

Decisions of this House have laid it down that in very exceptional cases . . . new matters may be considered by your lordships (LORD BIRKENHEAD, C.).

If the omission be a mere omission to state & argue a legal proposition which requires for its discussion no underlying hypothesis of facts other than those which have been admitted or proved in the cts. below, I should hold that your lordships should not turn a deaf ear to such argument even at the eleventh hour. But if the proposition is such that a variation in the admitted or proved facts, or any addition to them would affect the argument, then I think it is too late, & that your lordships should not allow the argument to be put forward (LORD DUNEDIN).—NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RY. —— ——.]—Where no applt. appears to support an appeal, the only order the House can make will be to dismiss the appeal for want of prosecution, with costs.—SCANLAN v. USHER (1842), 8 Cl. & Fin. 561; 8 E. R. 219, H. L.

92. —— —— Competency of appeal requiring to be argued.]—On the day appointed for hearing an appeal, when its competency also was first to be argued by one counsel at a side, pursuant to an order of the House, resp.'s counsel appeared at the bar, &, no counsel or agent appearing for applt., prayed that the appeal be dismissed. The House required him to open a primâ facie case against the appeal before they would dismiss it.—FRASER v. GORDON (1835), 3 Cl. & Fin. 718; 6 E. R. 1606, H. L.

93. —— —— Appellant having received indulgence from House.]—Where applt., after receiving indulgence from the House upon terms, fails to comply with the terms, or to appear on the day appointed for the hearing, his appeal will be dismissed with costs, upon motion, on behalf of resp., without requiring him to present a petition for the purpose.—MAHON v. IRWIN (1837), 4 Cl. & Fin. 559; 7 E. E. Counsel.

97. Number of counsel heard—Two on each side.]—(1) It is an inflexible rule of the House to hear only two counsel for each party in any one case; & the House will not avoid the effect of this rule by permitting one senior & one junior counsel to be heard in the opening, & a third counsel to reply.

(2) The opinion purports to be unanimous, but the more important matter of the reasons urged to support it would not seem to be thus represented. . . . The opinions of the learned judges are resorted to by your lordships, not to decide the question before you, but to give you information, suggestions, & generally speaking assistance in forming your own. It therefore becomes necessary that their reasons should accompany those opinions & accordingly they are by the course of your lordships' proceedings & indeed by your orders, invariably required (LORD BROUGHAM).—R. v. MILLIS, R. v. CARROLL (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 534; 8 E. 115. Questions of law.] — The judges were summoned to answer questions of law: they differed in opinion on these questions. Most of the judges being on circuit, two of their number attended on a day fixed by the House for receiving the answers, & proposed to read answers which embodied their own opinions & those of their brethern. The House adjourned the matter till the majority of the judges should have returned from the circuit, so as to be able to attend in person, & individually express their reasons for their opinions. It was intimated that this permission to dispense with the attendance of any of the judges to whom questions had been put, & who differed in their answers, must not be drawn into a precedent.—EGERTON v. BROWNLOW (EARL) (1853), 4 H. SECT. 8.—PRACTICE WITH REGARD TO DECISIONS IN COURT BELOW.

A. In General.

121. Where decision clearly right — Though Lords' decision on different grounds—House will not remit.]—Where a decision is clearly right, the House of Lords will not remit, merely because the ground of decision below has been different from the ground of its own decision.—YOUNG & CO. v. LEVEN (1816), 4 Dow, 138; 3 E. R. 1116, H. L.

122. Decision not reversed — For inaccurate form of issue merely—Non-direction or misdirection not misleading jury.]—(1) Where the real justice of a case between the parties has been tried, the House of Lords will not upset the proceedings because the form of the issue is inaccurate.

(2) In the case of a non-direction & no misdirection, where the jury have not been misled, the House of Lords will not entertain an objection to the judge's charge.—MACFARLANE v. TAYLOR (1868), L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. 245; 18 L. T. 214, H. L.

Sect. 2.—Appellate jurisdiction: Sub-sect. 8, A. & B.; sub-sects. 9 & 10.]

123. —— When judges unanimous below—Unless decision on erroneous principles.]—In matters of practice where the judges of the ct. below have been unanimous, the House never varies their decision unless perfectly satisfied that it is founded on erroneous principles.—COWAN v. BUCCLEUCH (DUKE) (1876), 2 App. Cas. 344, H. L.

124. Exercise of discretion by Court of Appeal—Confirming opinion of judge of first instance—Revision only in exceptional cases.]—It is only in exceptional cases that the House of Lords will entertain the revisal of a discretion exercised by the Ct. of Appeal confirming the opinion of the judge of first instance.—KENT COAL CONCESSIONS, LTD. v. DUGUID, [1910] A. C. 452; 79 L. J. K. B. 872; 103 L. T. 89; 26 T. L. R. 571 54 Sol. Jo. 634, H. L.

125. Award for salvage services—Made by court of first instance & confirmed by Court of Appeal—Not reviewed in absence of special circumstances—Award larger than Lords would have been.]—In the absence of exceptional or extraordinary circumstances the House will not interfere with the amount of an award for salvage services made by the ct. of first instance & confirmed by the Ct. of Appeal, even though the award be larger than their lordships would have granted if the question had come before them for assessment in the first instance.—GLENGYLE, HER CARGO & FREIGHT (OWNERS) v. NEPTUNE SALVAGE CO., THE GLENGYLE, [1898] A. C. 519; 67 L. J. P. 87; 78 L. T. 801; 14 T. L. R. 522; 8 Asp. M. L. C. 436, H. L.

126. Assessment of damages—Not admitting of precise calculation—Not reviewed.] — Resps. obtained against applts. an interdict restraining the latter in the working of their mines. Errors were made by both parties in respect of their rights, & the interdict was too wide in its terms. Applts. sustained damage by reason of this access. The interdict was, in effect, recalled by the House, & applts. brought their action for damages, & substantial damages were awarded. In the House larger damages were awarded, on the ground that the interdict continued to be operative for a longer time than the Lord Ordinary held it to be operative:—Held: the House could not interfere with an award of damages which did not admit of precise calculation, but was based upon a series of conjectures, the House not being in a position to deal with the detailed evidence which had been considered in the cts. below.—CLIPPENS OIL CO., LTD. v. EDINBURGH & DISTRICT WATER TRUSTEES, [1907] A. C. 291; 76 L. J. P. C. 79, H. L.

127. Decision on question of fact.]—The question of custom is undoubtedly a question of fact, but none the less it is a question of fact which it is quite right & proper for this House to review if there be reason to think that the learned judge who tried the action either misapprehended the evidence that was given, or that he misunderstood or misconstrued the correspondence which forms part of that evidence. I desire to make that statement lest it be thought that the House in a case of this kind would be prepared to avoid the necessity of investigation by the simple assertion that the matter was one of fact which had been determined by the learned judge who heard the witnesses. Excepting in cases where the of fact by certain tribunals are made final by statute, there is no reason why questions of fact should not be reviewed by this House, just as questions of law are, subject to this, that where the question of fact depends upon determining as to which, between two groups of witnesses, are to be believed in their oral evidence, in the absence of special & unusual circumstances their lordships would greatly hesitate before they interfered with the finding of the learned judge who had the opportunity of seeing & hearing the witnesses by whom the evidence was given (LORD BUCKMASTER, C.).—STRATHLORNE S.S. CO. v. BAIRD & SONS, [1916] S. C. 134, H. L.

B. Concurrent Findings of Fact.

128. 131. —— No law or settled practice.]—There is no law or settled practice of this House to prevent it from differing even from two concurrent judgments of fact, & this House cannot decline the duty of formally expressing its own judgment.—MONTGOMERIE & CO., LTD. v. WALLACE-JAMES, [1904] A. 132. —— Additional evidence in Court of Appeal—Further evidence in House of Lords.]—Where there have been concurrent findings of fact in the cts. below the House of Lords will not, in ordinary cases, review those findings. But in a case in which additional evidence, which had not been before the ct. of first instance, & tended to show that the witnesses on both sides were mistaken as to a material fact, was admitted in the Ct. of Appeal, &, after the hearing in the Ct. of Appeal, the parties agreed that certain other evidence which had been before that Ct. was inaccurate in some particulars, the House of Lords allowed the whole case to be re-opened.—OLYMPIC (OWNERS) v. BLUNT, OLYMPIC (OWNERS) v. ADMIRALTY

133. —— Tolerably clear evidence that finding erroneous—Finding based on consideration of probability.]—The rule that concurrent findings should not be disturbed on appeal does not apply where on appeal there is tolerably clear evidence which satisfies the ct. that the findings are erroneous, & the principle is especially applicable to a case in which the conclusion sought to be set aside rests upon the consideration of probability.—HATFIELD (OWNERS) v. GLASGOW (OWNERS), THE GLASGOW (1914), 84 L. J. P. 161; 112 L. T. 703; 13 Asp. M. L. C. 33, H. L.

134. —— In absence of misdirection.]—Resps., who had chartered a vessel from applts., the owners, to carry a cargo of grain, obtained judgment against applts. for damages for refusing to permit the vessel to go to Amsterdam, the port nominated by resps. under the charter. Applts. appealed to the Ct. of Appeal, which reserved judgment. Before the Ct. of Appeal delivered judgment the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1917, came into operation, but applts. did not bring the Act to the notice of the Ct. of Appeal & that Ct. dismissed the appeal. Sect. 3 of the Act provides that compliance with a direction given by a Govt. department in the national interest shall be a good defence to an action for non-fulfilment of a contract where the non-fulfilment is due to such compliance. On appeal to the House of Lords applts. applied to be allowed to raise a defence under the sect.:—Held: as applts. had not brought the Act to the attention of the Ct. of Appeal they ought not in the circumstances to be allowed to rely on the Act, & on the merits the appeal failed.—STRATH S.S. CO., LTD. v. HARDY (1919), 35 T. L. R. 336, H. L.

135. ——.]—In an action arising out of a collision between a merchant ship & one of His Majesty's cruisers, which was disabled & had exhibited the "not under command" signal, the owners of the merchant ship claimed damages against the officer in charge of the cruiser for negligent navigation.

ROCHE, J., & the Ct. of Appeal were of opinion on the evidence that the cruiser was out of command & that deft. was not guilty of negligence in the navigation of his ship in her disabled condition, but the Ct. of Appeal differed to some extent from ROCHE, J., on one subsidiary question of fact:—Held: there having been concurrent findings of fact substantially on the same grounds by the cts. below, their decisions ought not to be disturbed.—MENDIP RANGE STEAMSHIP v. RADCLIFFE, [1921] 1 A. 152. —— Plaintiff disclosing reasonable case—Important & debatable issue.]—It has long been a wholesome rule in litigation of this class [construction of settlements] that pltf. disclosing a reasonable case may invoke the assistance of the ct. without being personally involved in liability for damages if he fail. It has been thought reasonable in such cases that the cost of resolving a reasonable doubt should be borne by the estate. But it has been equally held that if pltf. being defeated in the ct. below, chooses to carry his quarrel further, & fails in the appellate ct., he must himself support the expenses of an adventure pronounced by the result to be rash. To this salutary rule one exception may, I think, be admitted. If the course of appeal in the appellate cts. discloses a difference of judicial opinion so clear & so persistent as to make it plain that there was in fact a legal issue to be debated both important & debatable, the indulgence may, in my opinion, be extended (LORD BIRKENHEAD, C.).—BOYCE v. WASBROUGH, [1922] 1 A. 206. Pardon under Great Seal cannot be pleaded—In answer to impeachment.]—The Act of Settlement, 1700 (c. 2), s. 3, which enacts that no pardon under the Great Seal shall be pleadable in bar to an impeachment by the Commons in Parliament, renders a pardon under the Great Seal wholly inoperative to prevent impeachment by the House of Commons, & so getting rid of the judgment of the House of Lords; for that purpose a subsequent pardon must be granted by the Crown.—R. v. BOYES (1861), 1 B. & S. 311; 30 L. 215. General duty of member—Representative—Not delegate.]—By our Constitution a representative is chosen by the vote of the majority, & however little the political views of the elected member coincide with those of the minority, they cannot complain. But that election is the election of a representative, &, whoever be chosen, there remains that he shall be a representative, & not one who has contractually fettered himself in discharge of the duty of representative which he has accepted as regards the public, & not only as regards his own supporters (FLETCHER-MOULTON, L.J.).

His [Member of Parliament's] primary duty is to his country, & he cannot bind himself at law by any promise in abnegation of such duty (FARWELL, L.J.).—OSBORNE v. AMALGAMATED SOCIETY OF RAILWAY SERVANTS, [1909] 1 Ch. 163; 78 L. Attendance at sitting—Not legally compellable.]—It is an error, I think, to suppose that there is now available any effective legal or parliamentary machinery to compel Members to attend the sitting of the House. . . . A Member may, no doubt, in justice to his constituents, be morally, though not legally, bound to attend the sitting of the House (LORD ATKINSON).—HOLLINSHEAD v. HAZLETON, [1916] 1 A. C. 428; 85 L. 218. Contract must be executory—At time of election.]—To incapacitate a person from being elected as a Member of the House of Commons as executing, holding or enjoying a contract made for the public service within the meaning of House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782 (c. 45), s. 1, such contract must, at the time of the election, be an executory one.

Where, therefore, under a contract for the supply of goods, the goods had been delivered to & accepted by the govt. before the election, & at the time of the election nothing remained to be done under the contract except for the govt. to pay the price which previously had become ascertained & was payable, the contractor was held not to be disqualified, inasmuch as, at the time of the election, the contract was executed, & was not within the statute.

House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782 (c. 45), s. 1, applies only to cases where the person contracting with the govt. knew, or ought reasonably to have known, that he was so dealing with the govt.

(c. 45), s. 1, & was therefore disabled for sitting & voting in the House of Commons.

Pltf., as a common informer, claimed penalties from deft. for having sat & voted in the House of Commons when incapacitated for so doing by reason of his interest in a govt. contract, contrary to the provisions of the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782 (c. 45). Two writs by other common informers against deft. for penalties for the same offence were issued prior to the writ in pltf.'s action :—Held : (2) it was not necessary for the maintenance of the action that pltf. should first have made oath under 21 Jac. 1, c. 4, that he believed in his conscience that the offence was committed by deft. within a year before action brought ; (3) the action failed inasmuch as it was barred not only by the fact of the prior issue of the other writs for penalties, but also by the fact that pltf. had proceeded under House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782 (c. 45), instead of under the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1801 (c. 52).—FORBES v. SAMUEL, [1913] 3 K. Application having been made to amend by adding the right statute :—Held : pltf. having based his claim for penalties on the wrong statute the discretion of the court to amend ought not to be exercised in favour of a common informer suing for penalties.—BURNETT v. SAMUEL (1913), 109 L. 226. —— ——.]—A Member of the House of Commons was partner in a firm which made a contract with the Secretary of State for India in Council for purchasing silver for the Indian currency. A common informer brought an action against the member for penalties, & alleged in the statement of claim that deft. was elected to Parliament on Jan. 10, 1910, & that he voted on various dates in 1912. In fact Parliament was dissolved on Jan. 10, 1910, & was again dissolved in Dec. 1910, & deft. was elected at a general election in Dec. 1910 :—Held : deft. had entered into a contract for or on account of the public service within House of Commons (Disqualification) Act, 1782 (c. 45), s. 1 ; pltf. was entitled to an amendment of the date alleged in the statement of claim as the date of deft.'s election, & therefore pltf. was entitled to recover the penalties sued for. —BIRD v. SAMUEL (1914), 30 T. SUB-SECT. 2.—SOLICITORS.

See, generally, SOLICITORS.

259. Taxation of costs.] — No jurisdiction for taxing a solr.'s bill of costs for obtaining an Act of Parliament.

In the House of Lords great difficulty has frequently occurred from not knowing how directly to tax a solr.'s bill. Under the recognisance the effect has certainly been obtained; & the House has sometimes called in the assistance of a master, to determine what the amount ought to be; but that has been considered only as putting in force the recognisance; not as a taxation, independant of that, by virtue of any inherent authority, possessed by the House. It must be admitted, that there is a great difference between the costs of a solr., attending the House of Lords in a cause, & the costs of soliciting a bill; which any one may do. Is there any instance of the taxation of such a bill as this, where the party has done no business in any cause as solr.? At present I think I have no authority to order it; but I will look into the cases (LORD ELDON, C.).—Ex p. WHEELER (1814), 3 Ves. & B. 21; 35 E. R. 387, L. C.

260. —— Gross overcharges.] — House of Commons Costs Taxation Act, 1847 (c. 69), does not deprive this ct. of its jurisdiction to order taxation of a solr.'s bill of costs for Parliamentary business. To entitle a client to an order for taxation of his solr.'s bill of costs after the expiration of twelve months from its delivery, he must show either pressure, or gross overcharge amounting to what this ct. designates as fraud. But it is not necessary to show both.

Taxation of a solr.'s bill for Parliamentary business ordered, under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, upon a petition presented more than twelve months from the delivery of the bill, on the ground of gross overcharges, amounting to what this ct. designates as fraud, coupled with misrepresentation by him in accounting for one of the items overcharged, notwithstanding the client knew of the circumstances, & had another legal adviser, within a month of the delivery of the bill, & might reasonably have availed himself of these circumstances to present his petition within the twelve months.—Re STROTHER (1857), 3 K. & J. 518; 26 L. 261. —— Scale.] — The costs of & connected with the preparation & making of a provisional order under the Light Railways Act, 1896 (c. 48), are taxed on the Chancery, & not the Parliamentary scale.

Semble: the deposit of plans ought to be made by post, & the cost of personal service will not be allowed, except under special circumstances.—Re P. (A SOLICITOR) (1909), 53 Sol. Jo. 735, C. A.

262. Recovery of fees & expenses — Right to payment out of deposit or bond.]—A solr. was employed in the promotion of a railway & in obtaining the Act for its incorporation. He was then appointed solr. of the co., & was employed in obtaining two other Acts by which the scheme was amended & fresh powers granted. The undertaking proved abortive, & the railway was never constructed. A warrant of the Board of Trade was obtained under Railways Abandonment Act, 1869 (c. 114), for the abandonment of the railway, which contained the usual clause that the bond which had been given for the completion of the railway should be assets of the co.:—Held: the costs of the solr. incurred in getting up the co., &, after its incorporation, in obtaining the subsequent Acts, were costs incurred on account of the promotion of the co. within Railways Abandonment Act, 1869 (c. 114), s. 5, & ought not to be paid out of the bond.—Re BARRY RY. CO. (1876), 4 Ch. D. 315; 46 L. J. Ch. 206; 36 L. T. 125; 25 W. R. 201, C. A.

263. —— ——.] — Where the undertaking, authorised by Parliament, of a tramway or other co. has been abandoned, all the creditors of the co., including the solr. or Parliamentary agent, concerned in the promotion of the bill in Parliament, are, as between themselves & the depositors, entitled, under Parliamentary Deposits & Bonds Act, 1892 (c. 25), s. 1 (1), (2), to be paid out of the Parliamentary deposit in priority to the depositors. But, in a case in which the co. was a paper co., that is, a co. which never had any existence beyond statutory incorporation, & there was a contest between several claimants to the deposit, including the solr. & Parliamentary agent who had been instrumental in obtaining the passing of the co.'s Act:—Held: none of claimants were entitled to rank as creditors.—Re MANCHESTER, MIDDLETON & DISTRICT TRAMWAYS CO., [1893] 2 Ch. 638; 62 L. 264. —— Solicitors employed by promoter of company—Liability of company—Implied promise to pay on taxation.]—A co. was being promoted for the building of a railway, & for the purchase, in connection therewith, of a certain canal. The promoters & a firm of solrs. came to an agreement, afterwards adopted by the co., by which the solrs. consented to give their services gratis "in the event of the application to Parliament failing, or the capital not being raised," but in the event of these two conditions being fulfilled, there were to be paid the customary professional charges for work done. An Act of Parliament was obtained incorporating the co., & providing for the transfer to it of the canal, & authorising the construction of the railway. The capital was not to exceed eight million pounds, & the co. was authorised to resolve that the canal undertaking & capital necessary for it should be a separate undertaking, with a separate capital. This course was adopted by the co., & the canal capital fixed at one & a quarter millions. This amount was raised, but the rest of the capital of the co. was not raised. In an action by the solrs. to recover the customary professional charges for work done by them:—Held: the raising of the canal capital was not a raising of "the capital," & the conditions of the contract made between the promoters & the solrs. not having been fulfilled, the solrs. were not entitled to succeed in the action.—NICHOLS v. NORTH METROPOLITAN RAILWAY & CANAL CO. 265. —— Solicitor employing Parliamentary agent — Solicitor's fees only recoverable.]—A solr., who employs a Parliamentary agent in passing a bill through Parliament but acts in some instances by himself & not through the agent, can only be allowed to charge for his services as a solr., & cannot claim fees as a Parliamentary agent, even in cases in which he may have acted without the aid of the Parliamentary agent.—Re WALTERS (1845), 9 Beav. 299; 1 New Pract. 267. Compliance with standing orders—Duty to ensure.]—It seems to be the business of the solr. for a private Act of Parliament, to take care that the standing orders of the House of Commons are complied with, even though they relate to maps, plans, etc.

It seems, that although the maps, etc., of an engineer may be incorrect, yet he is entitled to a remuneration for journeys made respecting them.—TAYLOR v. HIGGINS (1822), 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 19.

270. ——.]—Comrs. for supplying a town with water executed the works authorised by their Act, & supplied the district to which their powers extended. Eighteen years after they were incorporated complaints were made of the insufficiency of the supply, & their engineer reporting that any extension of the existing works would be insufficient, & recommending that a supply should be obtained from the S. Brook, a source to which the powers of their Act did not apply, & which would be sufficient for the supply, not only of the town, but also of several adjacent villages, it was resolved by a committee of management of the co. to apply to Parliament for powers to make works to render the S. Brook supply available, & they issued a prospectus for an additional capital of £90,000, & their views being approved & adopted at a special general meeting of the co., they employed their engineer to make plans pursuant to the standing orders of the House of Commons, which he accordingly did, & had them lithographed. The municipal corpn. of the town afterwards became the purchasers, under an Act of Parliament, of the works of the co., & liable to pay their debts:—Held: the engineer was entitled to recover against the corpn. his charges for preparing the Parliamentary plans.—BATEMAN v. ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE CORPN. 271. Deposit of borrowed money—Contract for repayment.]—A bank agreed with the promoters of a railway bill to deposit the Exchequer bills required to be deposited in Chancery by the Standing Orders of the House of Commons & it was agreed that the projectors should withdraw the bill at the third reading, unless the deposit should then have been repaid to the bank:—Held: (1) there was nothing illegal or contrary to public policy in this arrangement; (2) a bill would lie to compel the persons in whose names the Exchequer bills were invested to restore them to the bank.—SCOTT v. OAKELEY (1864), 33 Beav. 501; 4 New Rep. 5; 33 L. 273. —— —— Before payment of creditors.]—The principle of demanding a deposit is that it should stand as a security for the claims of creditors in case the work was not proceeded with during the period allowed for the completion of the work. Those creditors are entitled to come upon the deposit, & the policy of the legislature is that some one outside the railway co. should provide the security for any claims which had been created. That being so, it is clearly ultra vires for a railway co. to make a promise to repay the deposit out of their assets before the question whether or not there are any creditors had been decided (CHANNELL, J.).—HOARE v. PLYMOUTH & NORTH DEVON DIRECT RY. When a tramway co., which has been authorised to construct tramways by a provisional order of the Board of Trade, made under Tramways Act, 1870 (c. 78) & afterwards confirmed by an Act of Parliament, has failed to construct the authorised tramways within the time limited for the purpose, & has been ordered to be wound up, the ct. has not, under Board of Trade Rules, 1886, r. 22, jurisdiction to order the liquidator's general costs of the liquidation to be paid out of the deposit made, in pursuance of Tramways Act, 1870 (c. 78), s. 12, prior to the issue of the provisional order.—Re COLCHESTER TRAMWAYS CO., [1893] 1 Ch. 309; 62 L. The co. was ordered to be wound up on the ground of inability to pay its debts:—Held: the deposit was to be resorted to so far only as was necessary for paying creditors, & no order could be made for applying any part of it as assets of the co. until it was ascertained in the winding-up that there were debts which could not be paid by means of calls on the shareholders.—Re BRADFORD TRAMWAYS CO. In 1875 a receiver of the branch undertaking was appointed, & in 1876, an Act was obtained, extending the time for completion of the line to May, 1881. In 1880 an Act was obtained for the abandonment of the undertaking, providing that rights to compensation should not be affected thereby, & that subject to such rights, & the protection of the co.'s creditors, the ct. might order the deposit money to be repaid to the persons named in the Parliamentary warrant. There were no creditors' claims in respect of the branch undertaking, but the costs of the Act of 1876 & the abandonment Act were owing to B. who had paid them, & the general creditors of the co. had large claims. On the application of B. as representing the persons named in the warrant, for the payment to him of the deposit money:—Held: the deposit money had become part of the general assets of the co., & must be applied for the benefit of the general creditors.—Re MANCHESTER & MILFORD RY. 280. —— ——.]—By a special Act of 1885 a tramway co. was authorised to construct a tramway & a deposit was ordered to be paid. The Parliamentary Deposits & Bonds Act, 1892 (c. 27), s. 1, provided that where in pursuance of any general or special Act of Parliament moneys had been deposited "to secure the completion by any co." of any undertaking authorised by Parliament, & the undertaking had "not been completed" within the time limited in that behalf, the deposit fund should be applied towards compensating landowners &, in the case of a tramway co., the road authorities, & subject thereto, if, among other things, a receiver had been appointed, or the undertaking had been abandoned, for the benefit of the creditors of the co. The special Act of 1885 contained a substantially similar provision as to the application of the deposit fund if the co. did not complete the tramway within the time limit. In 1904, when the tramway had not been completed & before the expiration of the period for completion, a receiver of the undertaking of the co. was appointed & the uncompleted tramway was acquired by the London County Council under the powers of a special Act:—Held: both under the special Act of 1885 & under the general Act the deposit was paid to secure the completion of the undertaking by the co. &, inasmuch as that event could never happen by reason of the transfer of the undertaking, the time had passed within which the co. could complete; & there had been an abandonment of the undertaking by the co.; consequently that the deposit moneys paid under the special Act of 1885 were applicable for the benefit of the creditors of the co. subject to the prior claims, if any, of the landowners & road authorities.—Re PECKHAM, DULWICH & CRYSTAL PALACE TRAMWAYS BILL, [1910] 2 Ch. 1; 79 L. waters. An Act was accordingly obtained which authorised the making of (inter alia) such tramroad with all necessary embankments. The Act contained the usual provision with regard to the money deposited in respect of the application to Parliament—namely, that, if the co. should make default in opening the tramroads, then the deposit fund should be applied towards compensating any landowners or other persons whose property should have been interfered with or otherwise rendered less valuable by the commencement, construction, or abandonment of the tramroads or any part thereof. Who may oppose — Parties interested in property affected.]—A ct. of equity has jurisdiction, if a proper case connected with private property or interest be made, to restrain a party by injunction from petitioning against a bill in Parliament. The Stockton Railway co. being leased to the Clarence co., entered into an agreement for the sale of their railway to the Leeds co., & it was a term of the agreement, that the purchase should be completed three weeks after an Act had passed for permitting the Leeds to amalgamate with the Clarence Railway co. It did not appear that any definite agreement was concluded between the Clarence & the Leeds co., but it was understood that a bill should be presented by the Clarence co. for the amalgamation of the two cos. The bill was presented & passed the Commons without opposition, but in the Lords the Leeds co. presented a petition against the bill. The Stockton co., fearing that if this Act did not pass they would lose the benefit of their contract, filed a bill against the two other cos., praying an injunction to restrain the Leeds co. from opposing the bill in Parliament, & also specific performance of the agreement:—Held: the Stockton co. had not made out such a case as to induce a ct. of equity to exercise its jurisdiction by injunction.

A party who comes to oppose a railway bill in Parliament does so solely in respect of his private interest, not as representing any interest of the public, or for the purpose of communicating any information to Parliament. He is not even allowed to be heard as a petitioner against the bill, unless he has a locus standi in respect of some property or interest liable to be affected by it if it should pass into a law. This ct., therefore, if it sees a proper case connected with private property or interest, has just the same jurisdiction to restrain a party from petitioning against a bill in Parliament as if he were bringing an action at law, or asserting any other right connected with the enjoyment of the property or interest which he claims. . . . In order to found an equity upon these circumstances [pltfs.] must prove that the Clarence Railway co. are entitled to have that Act passed; for, if they are not, it follows that those against whom it is to be passed in Parliament, have a right to resist it. . . . The Clarence co. are not so entitled, for the evidence shows, that the Act was to be only consequential upon the agreement, when its terms should be definitely concluded; & that no such agreement has yet been concluded. . . . If there were no concluded contract, but only an intended contract, there could be no violation of duty in resisting the bill, which was only to give effect to such intended contract. On the contrary, the attempt to pass the bill under such circumstances, for any collateral purpose, would be a violation of duty on the part of the Clarence Railway co., & would justify the Leeds co. in opposing it. In that case, therefore, the injunction would operate, not to prevent, but to facilitate a violation of equity & duty (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—STOCKTON & HARTLEPOOL RY. SUB-SECT. 8.—REJECTION OF BILLS.

330. Grounds for rejection—What grounds presumed.]—A bill introduced into either House of Parliament & rejected, will be presumed to have been rejected on its merits, unless the contrary appear.

By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 21, no application to this ct. is to be granted where a similar application has been rejected by Parliament.

Where, therefore, a petitioner under this Act had several times applied to Parliament for similar powers of leasing certain settled property as were asked for by the present petition, & such applications were rejected:—Held: ct. had no power to grant such an application.—Re WILSON'S ESTATE BILL & SETTLED ESTATES ACT (1859), 1 L. 396. —— Of House of Commons.] — (1) The House of Commons is not subject to the control of her Majesty's Cts. in its administration of that part of the statute law which has relation to its internal procedure only. What is said or done within its walls cannot be inquired into in a ct. of law.

(2) A resolution of the House of Commons cannot change the law of the land. But a ct. of law has no right to inquire into the propriety of a resolution of the House restraining a member from doing within the walls of the House itself something which by the general law of the land he had a right to do, viz., take the oath prescribed by the Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866 (c. 19).

(3) An action will not lie against the Serjeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons for excluding a member from the House in obedience to a resolution of the House directing him to do so; nor will the ct. grant an injunction to restrain that officer from using necessary force to carry out the order of the House.

Pltf., having been returned as member for the borough of N., required the Speaker of the House of Commons to call him to the table for the purpose of taking the oath required by Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866 (c. 19). In consequence of something which had transpired on a former occasion the Speaker declined to do so; & the House, upon motion, resolved "that the Serjeant-at-Arms do exclude Mr. B., pltf., from the House until he shall engage not further to disturb the proceedings of the House." In an action against the Serjeant-at-Arms praying for an injunction to restrain him from carrying out this resolution:—Held: this being a matter relating to the internal management of the procedure of the House of Commons, the Ct. of Q. B. had no power to interfere.—BRADLAUGH v. GOSSETT (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 271; 53 L. J. Q. B. 209; 50 L. T. 620; 32 W. R. 552.

401. Limitation of doctrine.]—From the doctrines involved in this defence, namely, that the House of Commons could by their order authorise the violation of private rights, & by declaring the power thus exercised to be matter of privilege, preclude a ct. of law from inquiring into the existence of the privilege, doctrines which would have placed the rights & liberties of the subject at the mercy of a single branch of the Legislature, LORD DENMAN & his colleagues, in a series of masterly judgments which will secure to the judges who pronounced them, admiration & reverence so long as the law of England & a regard for the rights & liberties of the subject shall endure, vindicated at once the majesty of the law & the rights which it is the purpose of the law to uphold. To the decision of this ct. in that memorable case we give our unhesitating & unqualified adhesion. But the decision in that case has no application to the present. The position, that an order of the House of Commons cannot render lawful that which is contrary to law, still less that a resolution of the House can supersede the jurisdiction of a ct. of law by clothing an unwarranted exercise of power with the garb of privilege, can have no application where the question is, not whether the act complained of, being unlawful at law, is rendered lawful by the order of the House or protected by the assertion of its privilege, but is, independently of such order or assertion of privilege, in itself privileged & lawful (COCKBURN, C.J.).—WASON v. WALTER (1868), L. capias or exigent will not lie against a Lord of Parliament. If it is unlawful to issue such a writ, can it make any difference what is the intent of the party issuing it? I am clearly of opinion that it cannot, because the ct. must look to what was lawful or unlawful at the time of the issuing of the writ (TINDAL, C.J.).

Members of Parliament of both Houses are exempt from arrest of their persons. They are now liable to be sued, but cannot be arrested (BOSANQUET, J.).

A writ ordering a Member to be arrested is irregular. Peers have a privilege of peerage distinct from a privilege of Parliament, because peeresses in their own right have this privilege. By the privilege of Parliament generally Members of Parliament are privileged from arrest; a writ, therefore, directing the sheriff to seize their persons, is a writ ordering an illegal act (MAULE, J.).—CASSIDY v. STEUART (1841), 2 Man. & G. 437; 9 Dowl. 366; Drinkwater, 64; 2 Scott, N. 417. ——.]—Where persons having as a class, certain privileges, are by statute subjected to certain liabilities, their privileges being expressly reserved to them, & other persons having the same privileges are afterwards as a class subjected to the same liabilities, but nothing is said of their privileges, these privileges still continue to exist. Privilege of Parliament exists at common law, & is not taken away by implication because a statute makes persons enjoying it subject to the law of bkpcy., & does not specially reserve the privilege. Before 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, traders having privilege of Parliament were rendered liable to the bkpt. laws, but the privilege of freedom from personal arrest was expressly reserved to them. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 69, all debtors, nontraders as well as traders, were made liable to the bkpt. laws. Nothing was said in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, to reserve to debtors, who had privilege of Parliament, their freedom from personal arrest:—Held: the statute included all debtors whatever, but such debtors as were entitled to privilege of Parliament still continued to enjoy its protection.—NEWCASTLE (DUKE) v. MORRIS (1870), L. 418. Remedy revived—On expiry of privilege.] Where a party arrested under a ca. sa. is discharged on the ground of privilege, the writ is not executed, & he may be retaken under it when his privilege expires. Where a party, against whom there are several writs of ca. sa. in the sheriff's office, is taken under one of them in execution of a judgment not duly revived by sci. fa., the arrest, though illegal, is not illegal from any wrongful act on the part of the sheriff, & therefore enures as a good arrest under all the other writs.—REYNOLDS v. NEWTON (1841), 1 Gal. & Dav. 153.

421. ——.]—A peer may be sued in the Ct. of K. B. by bill, as having privilege of Parliament. The authority of that Ct. to hold plea, by bill in any cases, cannot be questioned in the Ex. Ch.

The case of Gosling v. Weymouth (Lord), No. 420, ante, is a decision directly in point & as the judgment there given by the Ct. of K. B. was acquiesced in, it becomes an authority in all cts. It is there decided, that, by the practice of the Ct. of K. B. a peer, before the statute of King William, might & still may, be sued by bill. Were it a question concerning the privilege of the peerage from arrests we should hesitate before admitting that privilege to be infringed by any single decision or by the practice of any Court; but here the privilege is not attacked; it is a mere question of practice as to the manner of suing, & seems to be at rest by the decision of Lord Weymouth's case. If it can at this day be questioned whether the Ct. of K. B. have authority to hold pleas by bill in the case of a peer, that question affecting the jurisdiction of the ct. could not be inquired into before us, as that is an exception to our authority in the original institution of this ct. p. —— Committal for contempt.]—The Legislative Council & Legislative Assembly of Victoria have all the privileges, immunities & powers which were legally held enjoyed & exercised by the Commons House of Parliament at the time of the passing of the Constitution Act; & publication outside the Parliament House of a newspaper article adjudged by the Assembly to be a libel on the Assembly, on a select committee thereof & on a member of each in his capacity of such member is a contempt for which the Assembly has authority to commit.—Re DILL (1862), 1 W. & W. 171.—AUS.

q. —— ——.]—Held: the Speaker of the Colonial Assembly has power to issue his warrant to arrest for contempt of the Legislature.—DILL v. MURPHY (1864), 10 L. T. 170, P. C.—AUS.

a [illegible] corpus on behalf of deft., the return set out a warrant issued by applt., as Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Victoria, stating that resp. had been guilty of a contempt & breach of privilege of the assembly, & directing the Serjeant-at-Arms to take him into custody:—Held: the warrant was a sufficient answer to the writ; the full power & privilege of deciding what is contempt & of committing for that contempt having been conferred on the Legislative Assembly.—VICTORIA LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY (SPEAKER) v. GLASS (1871), 24 L. T. 317, P. C.—AUS.

t. —— ——.]—A warrant under the hand & seal of the Speaker of the Nova Scotia House of Assembly, reciting that T. was by resolution of the House adjudged guilty of a contempt thereof, committed in the face of the House, & was adjudged to be committed to gaol, commanded the Serjeant-at-Arms to convey T. to gaol & the gaoler to receive him:—Held: the commitment was not under the Act; the House can only proceed for contempt in the way pointed out by the Act & not by a general warrant.—Re THOMAS, 21 C. L. T. 503.—CAN.

-.]—The House of Assembly has the power of imprisoning persons guilty of contempt in answering or refusing to answer questions before a select committee.—MCNAB v. BIDWELL (1830), Dra. 144.—CAN.

b. —— ——.]—Where a party having privilege had been in contempt for non-compliance with an order of the ct., & the order nisi for a sequestration had been duly served; but between that & the application for the writ to issue, the party had ceased to be a member, the ct. refused the writ, & directed the party moving to commence proceedings for the contempt de novo.—MEYERS v. HARRISON (1853), 4 Gr. 148.—CAN.

c. —— ——.]—Held: the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Nova Scotia has, in the absence of express grant, no power to remove one of its members for contempt, unless he is actually obstructing the business of the House.—LANDERS v. WOODWORTH (1878), 2 R. & C. 84; 2 S. C. R. 158.—CAN.

d. —— ——.]—The jurisdiction given to the Legislature by R. S. O. 1877, c. 12, to punish as for a contempt, does not oust the jurisdiction of the cts. where the offence is of a criminal character, but the same act may be in one aspect a contempt of the Legislature & in another aspect a misdemeanour.—R. v. BUNTING (1884), 7 O. R. 524.—CAN.

e. —— ——.]—The Nova Scotia House of Assembly has statutory power to adjudicate that wilful disobedience to its order to attend in reference to a libel reflecting on its members is a breach of privilege & contempt, & to punish that breach by imprisonment.—FIELDING v. THOMAS, [1896] A. C. 600; 5 Cart. 398.—CAN.

f. —— ——.]—The House of Assembly of the Island of Newfoundland does not possess, as a legal incident, the power of arrest, with a view of adjudication on a contempt committed out of the House; but only such powers as are reasonably necessary for the proper exercise of its functions & duties as a local legislature.—KIELLEY v. CARSON, KENT (1843), 2 Nfld. L. R. App. X.—NFLD.

g. —— —— Jurisdiction of court to discharge.]—Re GLASS (1869), 6 W. W. & A'B. 45.—AUS.

h. —— —— ——.]—Petitioner was committed to gaol by the House of Assembly, on the warrant of the Speaker of the House, for the space of ten days for breach of the privileges of the House in that as deputy returning officer he had been guilty of gross fraud concerning the election books:—Held: the cts. could not inquire into such commitment, nor discharge nor bail a person so committed, yet if the commitment did not profess to be for contempt, but was evidently arbitrary, the ct. would not only be competent but bound to discharge the prisoner.—Ex p. LAVOIE (1855), 5 L. C. R. 99.—CAN.

k. —— —— Duration.]—A prisoner committed to the common gaol by Parliament during pleasure is entitled to his discharge as soon as Parliament is prorogued, & such discharge may be obtained by habeas corpus.—Ex p. MONK, 2 R. de L. 1817.—CAN.

l. —— —— ——.]—The House of Assembly has power to imprison or otherwise punish for disobedience of its orders during the session.—THOMAS v. HALIBURTON (1893), 26 N. S. R. 55.—CAN.

—— ——.]—See, also, DEPENDENCIES, Vol. XVII., pp. 425–427, Nos. 70–88.

m. —— Breach of—Amounting to crime—Jurisdiction of House excluded.]—Held: the presentation of a petition by pltf. reflecting on members of the House was a violation of law, for which he was liable to punishment under the provisions of R. S. c. 3, & a provincial legislature cannot adjudicate upon a crime indictable at common law merely because the offence touches its privileges.—THOMAS v. HALIBURTON (1893), 26 N. S. R. 55.—CAN.

14. Incorporeal hereditaments—Share in New River Company.]—R. was tenant in common with his brother C., under their father's will, of an interest in the New River co. The dividends were paid separately to R. & C., & they were regarded by the co. as being each the owner of an undivided share in the interest. No formal partition of the property, however, was at any time effected, & in an agreement between R. & C. relating to the partition of other property of which they were tenants in common it was recited that they had agreed not to partition the interest in the New River co., but to retain it for the present in their joint ownership. R. afterwards died, having devised to C. all his share & interest of & in all the real estate derived under the will of his father, which he held as tenant in common with C., & which should not, at the date of R.'s death, have been partitioned. At the date of R.'s death there was other real estate of which R. & C. were tenants in common under their father's will, & which had not in any way been partitioned. On a summons taken out for the determination of the question whether R.'s share in the interest in the New River co. passed to C. under the above devise or not:—Held: (1) in view of the separate receipt of dividends by R. & C., there had ceased to be unity of possession in the interest, it had been fully partitioned & R. & C. had ceased to be tenants in common of it, & it therefore did not pass by the devise; (2) the recital in the agreement for the partition of the other property was not admissible as evidence of testator's intention.—Re TRIMMER, CRUNDWELL v. TRIMMER (1904), 91 L. T. 26; 48 Sol. Jo. 492.

15. Jus individuum.]—Where two persons are joint owners of a lake, with a common right of sailing, fishing, floating timber, etc., such right is not indivisible; but either may, without the consent of the other, alien the whole or any portion of his right, even where it is merely appurtenant to the land.

But if the effect of such alienation was to deprive the co-owner of the full enjoyment of his moiety, such co-owner could maintain an action for the regulation of his enjoyment, as he could if there had been no alienation.

He contends that the ownership of a lake is what is called a jus individuum—incapable of division; & that where there are two joint proprietors of such a right one of them cannot, without the consent of the other, introduce a third. That that is the state of the law in reference to some property there is no doubt. You cannot in the case of a peerage, for instance, split that so as to make two peerages—you cannot grant part of a peerage (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).—MENZIES v. MACDONALD (1856), 2 Macq. 463; 2 Jur. N. 16. Land subject to overriding trust.]—Under a will two persons were equally entitled to real property for life with remainder to their children & issue, who were not yet ascertained. The trustees of the will had, during the lives of the tenants for life, powers of working a quarry on the estate, & making roads over the property for the purpose, & were directed to work the quarry & divide the profits among the persons entitled:—Held: while the overriding power & trust existed, the ct. had no jurisdiction to make a decree for partition or sale under Partition Acts.—TAYLOR v. GRANGE (1880), 15 Ch. 17. ———.]—Where land is subject to an overriding term limited upon trusts for management which require the possession of the entirety to remain in the trustees, there is no right to a partition during the continuance of those trusts.

Testator by his will settled real estate upon certain trusts under which, in the events which had happened, pltf. was entitled, subject to a term of a thousand years, to the entire estate in fee simple, subject, however, as to one moiety thereof to have her estate divested by the attaining of a vested interest therein by other persons. The term was limited to trustees upon certain trusts for management & application of the rents under which, in the events which had happened, one moiety of the rents thereof was payable to pltf. together with a part of the other moiety. In an action by pltf. for partition of the estate:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to a partition on the grounds (a) there was not joint tenancy or tenancy in common; (b) the trusts for management required that the entirety of the property should remain in the trustees.—DODD v. CATTELL, [1914] 2 Ch. 1; 83 L. SECT. 6.—ADJUSTMENT OF EXPENDITURE AND CHARGES.

58. Liability to maintain sea wall—Covenant running with land.]—A deed of partition was executed in 1794, of land protected from the sea by a wall which skirted the land of one of the part owners. The deed contained a covenant that the expenses of maintaining the sea walls should be borne by the parties to the deed, their heirs, exors. & administrators, in proportion to their acreage. Part of the land was liable to scots for the repair of other sea walls, & had been purchased by the present owners under conditions which precluded them from inquiring into the deed of 1794:—Held: they were, from the position of their land, put on inquiry as to their liability to repair all sea walls which protected it, & were liable to contribute to the expenses of repairing the wall. Semble: such a covenant runs with the land.—MORLAND v. COOK (1868), L. 59. Specific performance of agreement for partition.] — Devise to trustees, in trust to sell, & purchase other estates, to be settled. Those entitled under the limitations directed of the estates to be purchased have equitable interests co-extensive until a sale. Therefore a specific performance was decreed of an agreement for partition against an objection to a title under

60. ——.]—A. & B., having an apparent title to copyhold lands as tenants in common in fee under the will of their father, entered into a parol agreement to make partition of the devised land, & divided them accordingly, A., the elder brother, taking somewhat the larger share, a doubt being then entertained whether their father had a right to devise the lands. A. was, in fact, at the time of this agreement, tenant in tail under the limitations of a surrender made by his grandfather; & after A.'s death without issue, B., having discovered his own title as tenant in tail, repudiated the agreement, & brought an action of ejectment to recover the whole estate.

On a bill filed by the devisee of A., the ct., upon the principle on which it supports family arrangements, decreed B. to do all necessary acts to bar the entail, & vest the parts of the lands, allotted under the agreement to A., upon the trusts of A.'s will.—NEALE v. NEALE (1837), 1 Keen, 672; 48 E. R. 466.

61. ——.]—The ct. might enforce the specific performance of an agreement between joint tenants of a copyhold estate to divide the land & hold the respective parts in severalty, & decree the parties to make mutual surrenders for that purpose; although, before 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 35, the ct. had not jurisdiction in a mere suit for partition, to decree the partition of copyholds.—BOLTON v. WARD (1845), 4 Hare, 530; 14 L. 63. Mortgagor of one share—Against mortgagee.]—Where one tenant in common has mortgaged his interest in the property to another tenant in common, the mtgor. cannot enforce a partition or sale of the property against the will of the mtgee., except on the terms of paying off the mtge., & this rule is unaffected by Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 25 (2).—GIBBS v. HAYDON (1882), 47 L. 67. ——.]—In ejectment, the lessor of pltf. was heir in tail of one of three coparceners, all of whom had been married. The other two had suffered recoveries of their shares; & in 1759 the three husbands entered into an agreement for a partition of the lands in question, as well as of other lands, some leasehold & some freehold, providing for a deed of partition to be afterwards executed; there was no proof that such deed ever had been executed; but the lands were held from that time to the commencement of the action in accordance with that agreement. The coparcener, under whom the lessor of pltf. claimed, died in 1818; & the action was commenced in 1832, before the passing of Real Property Limitation Act, 1832 (c. 27):—Held: there was no ground for presuming a fine or recovery, which would be necessary to bar the entail; the agreement for partition not contemplating any such proceeding, but provding only for the execution of a deed of partition.—DOE d. R. 371; sub nom. PEARSE v. NEEDHAM, 2 W. R. 514.

75. Reformation of deed — Mistake.] — Surveyors appointed to make a partition between tenants in common, having, by mistake, allotted to one of them a piece of land which belonged to him exclusively; & several of the allotments having been sold before the mistake was discovered, the ct. decreed a pecuniary compensation to be made to him.—DACRE v. GORGES (1825), 2 Sim. & St. 454; 4 L. J. O. S. Ch. 50; 57 E. R. 420.

76. ——.]—After a partition under a decree, the ct. cannot give a party any right as to the property, which the certificate of the comrs. & the deeds of partition do not give him: nor will it interfere to reform the deeds, in order to give a party the more convenient & complete use or enjoyment of his portion of the premises.—BURLEY v. MOORE (1827), 5 L. J. O. S. Ch. 120.

SECT. 10.—BARS TO PARTITION.

77. Agreement to deal with the land—Inconsistent with partition.]—A. being entitled to an undivided moiety of a piece of ground, agreed with B. that in case either of them should at any time purchase the other moiety, the whole should be divided in a particular manner between them; the moiety was sold to a third party, whereupon A. & B. further agreed that neither of them would purchase that moiety until they had agreed upon a sum to be given for it, subject to the stipulations & conditions of the former agreement. A. afterwards refused to agree upon the price to be given, & B. having purchased the moiety of the property, A. refused to carry the agreement into effect:—Held: (1) A. was not justified in refusing to fix a price; & (2) a suit having been instituted against him by B. for a partition of the property, A. had abandoned the contract, & could not set it up as a bar to the partition.—MORRIS v. TIMMINS (1838), 1 Beav. 411; 48 E. R. 999.

78. —— ——.]—Four persons purchased some land, & agreed that it should be laid out in streets, & sold in lots, according to a specified plan. All the parties died; & there being no equitable ground for putting an end to the agreement:—Held: the representatives of one of the parties could not maintain a suit for a partition against the representatives of the others.

Consistently with the agreement . . . there cannot be a partition. It is evident that, according to that agreement, the parties thereto & those claiming under them, were to hold the land remaining unsold together, for the purpose of selling the same in lots for building, according to a certain plan. The bill does not allege any equitable ground for putting an end to the agreement, but claims partition as a right (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—PECK v. CARDWELL (1839), 2 Beav. 137; 48 E. R. 1131.

SECT. 11.—COSTS.

79. According to value of shares.]—(1) Where the parties are equally interested, the practice is to give the custody of the deeds to pltf., but where they are not, then they are usually given to the person having the greatest interest.

(2) Subsequent costs, in a partition suit, ordered to be borne by the parties according to the value of their respective shares.—ELTON v. ELTON (No. 1) (1860), 27 Beav. 632; 54 E. R. 251; sub nom. ELTON v. ELTON, BAILY v. ELTON, 6 Jur. N. S. 136.

80. Death of co-owner.]—A. & B. being entitled to fourteen freehold houses as tenants in common in undivided moieties, entered into an agreement for partition, by which A. was to take & hold in severalty seven of the houses, & B. the other seven. Both died before a deed of partition was executed. A., who was the survivor, specifically devised the seven houses agreed to be held in severalty by him, but allowed the legal estate in one moiety of the other seven houses to devolve on his heir-at-law:—Held: the costs of carrying the agreement for partition into effect, including the costs incurred in getting in the outstanding legal estate, must be borne by the devisees of A., & not by his personal estate.—Re TANN, TANN v. TANN, GRAVATT v. TANN (1) (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 434; 38 L. J. Ch. 459.

Part IV.—Inclosure Awards.

81. Award made without jurisdiction not conclusive.]—Pltfs. brought an action for the recovery of certain land as representatives of a person to whom the land had been allotted in severalty by an award of partition made under Inclosure Acts in 1880. Defts. were in possession of the land, & at the date of the award had acquired a good title thereto under Stat. Limitations, having been in undisturbed possession since 1851. The partition was not made under any inclosure scheme. None of the parties to the partition proceedings had any interest whatever in the land, & it was by mere mistake included in the schedule to their application & dealt with in the award:—Held: the effect of Inclosure Act, 1845 (c. 118), s. 105, was not to make the award conclusive as to the title of the allottee, & the award, not having been made on the application of persons interested in the land within Inclosure Act, 1848 (c. 99), s. 13, had been made without jurisdiction, & defts. were therefore entitled to judgment.—JACOMB v. TURNER, [1892] 1 Q. PART I. SECT. 2.

2 i. Essentials of partnership—Mutual participation in profit & loss.]—A partnership inter se can only exist where there is an express agreement between the parties to divide both profits & losses in certain proportions between them, or where such agreement to divide losses may be implied from the fact of a joint ownership of the capital & stock in trade.—WALLER'S TRUSTEES v. BROOM (1825), 1 Nfld. I have always understood the definition of partnership to be a mutual participation in profit & loss (TINDAL, C.J.).

No action will lie for one of the parties unless there has been a balance struck (PARK, J.).—GREEN v. BEESLEY (1835), 2 Bing. N. C. 108; 1 Hodg. 199; 2 Scott, 164; 4 L. J. C. P. 299; 132 E. R. 43.

3. —— ——.]—Where there is also evidence that deft. has acted with relation to the proposed scheme, it is a question for the jury, whether, by his consent & acts, he has authorised the solr., or secretary, or any member of the committee, to pledge his credit for the necessary & ordinary expenses to be incurred in forming such a co.; & if so, whether the work was done, & the credit given, on the faith of his being liable. Such an intended assocn. does not constitute a partnership, inasmuch as it constitutes no agreement to share in profit or loss.—REYNELL v. LEWIS, WYLD v. HOPKINS (1846), 15 M. & W. 517; 4 Ry. & Can. —— —— Sharing profit & loss as consideration affecting partnership generally.]—See Part II., Sect. 5, post.

5. —— Contribution of capital, labour or skill —Sleeping partner.]—(1) Partnership Act, 1865 (c. 86), s. 1, does not apply to any contract unless the advance of money under it would, independently of that Act, have created the relation of debtor & creditor as distinguished from the relation of partners.

(2) In the absence of something in the contract to show a contrary intention, the right to share profits, as profits, constitutes according to English law, a partnership.

(3) Then whether or not the assocn. requires that one or more of the partners shall contribute labour or skill, or what they shall contribute, is a question which may be considered as subsidiary; but I take it that the ordinary meaning of the word "partnership" is that, no doubt as a rule, each partner does contribute something, either in the shape of property or skill. But it is not a universal rule. . . . You can have, undoubtedly, according to English law, a dormant partner who puts nothing in, neither capital, nor skill, nor anything else. In fact, those who are familiar with partnerships know it is by no means uncommon to give a share to the widow or relative of some former partner who contributes nothing at all, neither name, nor skill, nor anything else. Therefore it is not quite accurate that they must contribute labour, skill, or money, or some or all of them (JESSEL, M.R.).—POOLEY v. DRIVER (1876), 5 Ch. D. 458; 46 L. J. Ch. 466; 36 L. Assignment for benefit of creditors — Debtor carrying on business—Whether partner with trustees or creditor.]—A., a horse dealer & jobber, by a deed of trust, assigned all his stock-in-trade, etc., to certain trustees for the benefit of his creditors, until all his then debts should be paid off, to hold on certain trusts (inter alia) that, so long as A. should observe the orders of the trustees, he was to be allowed to carry on & conduct the business, subject to their orders, but that they should have the power to determine his possession on his failing to observe their orders; that all moneys received in the business were to be paid to the account of the trustees, & all moneys paid by their cheques; & that A. was to receive a certain weekly salary. The creditors also advanced a large sum of money to carry on the business. The business was carried on by A. for some time, his name being over the door at the place of business, & he had dealings with various persons as if he carried on the business on his own account; but on his neglecting to observe the orders of the trustees, they determined his right to carry on the business, & he admitted in writing, that they had a right to & did assume the possession of the stock-in-trade, etc. The trustees thereupon gave notice to the parties who had some of the horses, part of the stock-in-trade, that they belonged to them. Two days after this notice A. committed an act of bkpcy. On an interpleader issue, to try whose horses these were:—Held: the deed did not create a partnership between A. & the trustees; the trustees, by allowing A. to carry on the business in his own name, were not estopped from denying that the horses were A.'s.—PRICE v. GROOM (1848), 2 Exch. 542; 17 L. soon as the losses were made up B. was to resell the business to W. without any further responsibility on the part of B., or any consideration on the part of W. Trustees to wind up business.]—A deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors was made by E. which contained, amongst others, a clause empowering the trustee "to employ the said E. or any other person, in winding up the affairs of him the said E. & in collecting & getting in his estate & effects, & in carrying on his trade," etc., which was that of a publican. In an interpleader issue between the trustee & a creditor, who, having obtained a judgment, had taken the property in execution:—Held: the above clause did not create a partnership of the creditors, for the purpose of carrying on the trade of E. but amounted simply to a power to the trustee to wind up the affairs of the execution debtor, & therefore the deed was valid against the execution creditor.—JANES v. WHITBREAD (1851), 11 C. 18. Firm—Corporation.]—A firm of S. & Co. consisted of three partners, F., R., & N., & carried on business in London. Another firm of N. & Co. consisted of five partners, F., R., N., H., & M., & carried on business in India. In Sept. 1872, N & co. applied by letter to a bank for a credit, agreeing to deliver to the bank as security "the personal obligation of this firm & individual partners, & a guarantee by S. & co." The bank granted the credit, & under it N. & co. received large advances. In Feb. 1874, a letter was addressed to the bank, signed by S. & co. & also by F., R., & N., saying, "We hereby guarantee you payment of all sums which are or may at any time become due to you by N. & co. under the credit applied for in Sept., 1872, & granted by you." This letter & the signature of S. & co. to it were written by F., & he had negotiated the original transaction with the bank. S. & co. filed a liquidation petition, & N. & co. stopped payment, a large sum being due to the bank under the credit:—Held: the letter of Feb. 1874, pledged to the bank the joint liability of the firm of S. & co., & also the separate liability of each of the three partners who signed it, & the bank were entitled to prove against the separate estate of F. for the amount due to them by N. & co. under the credit.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

25. Whole circumstances to be considered.]—Agreement in writing entered into between W. & co., British merchants, carrying on business at Calcutta with a Hindoo Rajah, by which, in consideration of moneys already advanced, & which might be thereafter advanced by the Rajah to them, they agreed to carry on the business subject to the control of the Rajah in several particulars, stipulating that the Rajah should receive a commission of 20 per cent. on all profits made by the firm until the whole amount of the debt due to him should be paid off with 12 per cent. interest upon all cash advances which had been or might be thereafter made by him to the firm. Further advances having been made by the Rajah to the firm, W. & co. executed to him a mtge. of certain tea plantations, to secure the then amount of his advances, & the Rajah by a deed released his right to commission & interest under the original agreement between them. No proceeds of the business were ever received by the Rajah, & though he was credited in the books of the firm with a considerable sum, that sum was never received by him, & was afterwards written back in the books of the firm. The Rajah did not interfere or exercise any such control in the business as to make him an ostensible partner in the firm:—Held: (1) having regard to the restrictions & modifications made of late in the rule of law formerly prevailing, participation in the net proceeds of a business made the participant liable as a partner to third parties; & looking at the whole scope of the agreement, the primary object was to give security to the Rajah as a creditor of the firm of W. & co., & the participation given him in the net profits of the business was not sufficient to establish a partnership between W. & co. & the Rajah as regarded third parties.

(2) Although a right to participate in the profits of a trade is a strong test of partnership, & there may be cases where, from such perception alone, it may as a presumption—not of law, but of fact—be enforced, yet whether that relation does or does not exist must depend on the real intention & contract of the parties.

Where a man holds himself out as a partner or allows others to do it . . . he is then properly estopped from denying the character he has assumed & upon the faith of which creditors may be presumed to have acted. A man so acting may be rightly held liable as a partner by estoppel (SIR MONTAGUE SMITH).—MOLLWO, MARCH & CO. v. COURT OF WARDS (1872), L. R. 4 P. C. 419; 9 Moo. P. C. C. N. S. 214; 17 E. A. having paid all the expenses of the keep & management of the horse, & there being no winnings to divide:—Held: even assuming that this agreement constituted a partnership between A. & B., which the ct. thought it did not, A. was entitled to recover from B. a moiety of the disbursements made by him on account of the horse, as being in the nature of an advance of capital for B.—FRENCH v. STYRING (1857), 2 C. —— Land speculations with solicitor—Method of book-keeping.]—H., who was a solr., had for many years previously to his death been engaged in various land speculations jointly with C. The speculations consisted in the buying & selling of plots of land, the laying out of the land for building purposes, & the advancing of money to builders. The lands were generally bought in consideration of chief rents, & then sold to builders at increased chief rents, which were retained by H. & C. The conveyances of the lands bought were taken either to H. & C. jointly or to C. alone. A banking account was kept in the names of H. & C., & statements of account were made out every half-year, but there were no partnership articles between H. & C. Upon the death of H., there being an intestacy as to certain lands & chief rents which had been acquired by him in the course of his joint speculations with C., the question arose as to whether H.'s share of the property went to his heir-at-law or to his next of kin, as being partnership property & subject to conversion:—Held: the proper inference to be drawn from the evidence & statements of account was, that the relation which had existed between H. & C. was that of partners, & they were not co-owners of real estate but the property in question constituted partnership assets.—Re HULTON, HULTON v. LISTER (1890), 62 L. 42. —— Consent to acts of co-owners as condition precedent to liability—Master & owner of vessel.]—Pltfs. chartered a barge, the Myrtle, for the carriage of a cargo of cement, which was lost through the sinking of the barge consequent upon her unseaworthiness. The barge was being worked on the system of "thirds," under which the master, C., took two-thirds of the gross freights, paying thereout the mate, crew, cost of provisions, & the expenses of the voyage, & handing over one-third of the gross freights, less harbour & towage dues & brokerage, to deft. the owner, who provided the barge & paid for her upkeep. Neither the charterparty nor the bill of lading contained any reference to the owner. C., described only as "of the good ship the Myrtle," signed the charterparty, but not as "master" or "for the owner," & in the bill of lading, which he signed as "E. C.," he was referred to as "the master of the said ship."

In an action by pltfs. against deft. to recover the amount of the lost cargo, deft. denied liability on the ground that the contract was with the master, & that there was nothing to show that he was agent of, or servant for, an undisclosed principal.

It appeared from the evidence that C. usually arranged the chartering; that he was appointed by the deft. to work & sail the ship; & that he was not dismissable during the continuance of the voyage except for grave misconduct.

Co-owners are not partners. 44. —— —— ——.]—In 1843 pltf. & A. entered into a parol contract to become jointly concerned in a speculation for buying, improving, & selling land at B.; A. to find the necessary capital, & pltf., a land agent, to select, purchase, lay out, & resell the same, without charge; the advances made by A., with interest thereon, to be the first charge upon the proceeds of the resale, & the surplus profits to go, two thirds to A. & one third to pltf. Land was selected & purchased by pltf. accordingly, & A. afterwards made over a moiety of his interest in the speculation to C. The purchase-money was provided by A. & C., & the conveyance taken in their joint names. On pltf. repeatedly pressing, by letters to A., for some written acknowledgment of his interest, A. handed over to him a copy of an agreement, dated Oct. 27, 1843, & made between A. & C., to the effect that A. & C. were interested in two thirds of the surplus profits, & that the remaining one third was to be reserved for pltf.; but that pltf. should have no power to determine when any resale should take place. In 1844 A. died, having devised the property by his will. To a bill by pltf. against C. & the devisees of A. for an account, a sale of the land, & application of the proceeds, according to the agreement, all defts. insisted by answer on Stat. Frauds, C. admitting that, previously to his joining in the speculation, A. had informed him that pltf. was to have one third of the surplus profits:—Held: (1) this was a partnership; &, the fact of the partnership being established by general evidence, the land would be dealt with in equity as the stock of the partnership, & the statute was no bar to pltf.'s claim; (2) the memorandum of Oct. 1843, coupled with the previous assertions in writing of pltf.'s right, which was never denied by A., was a sufficient manifestation in writing, within the statute, of the pre-existing interest of pltf. in the lands.—DALE v. HAMILTON (1847), 2 Ph. 266; 16 L. 45. —— —— ——.] — A partnership, no doubt, may exist in land, as in the case of Dale v. Hamilton, No. 44, ante, but a partnership means this: that the joint property shall be employed for some purposes which shall produce a return in the shape of profits, or so as to add to its value; but nothing of that sort took place here. It was, in fact, nothing more than a joint occupation, under a joint ownership of the property, &, in that point of view, the source from which any money laid out by either party was obtained is immaterial, & does not give the person from whom the money is derived any lien (ROMILLY, M.R.).—KAY v. JOHNSTON (1856), 21 Beav. 536; 52 E. 46. —— —— ——.]—(1) A., in June, 1869, borrowed £250 from B., &, at the time, signed a paper in the following words: "In consideration of the sum of £250 this day paid to me, I hereby undertake to execute a deed of co-partnership to you for one-eighth share in the profits of the Oxford Music Hall & Tavern, to be drawn up under Partnership Act, 1865 (c. 86), called an 'Act to amend the Law of Partnership'":—Held: this paper, which contained no provision as to the date or duration of the partnership, constituted a partnership at will; & it was not put an end to by a letter, dated in Aug. 1872, in which A. promised to repay B. on Sept. 1, 1872, the principal sum together with interest thereon, treating it only as a loan, such as should, as on a calculation of one-eighth of the profits, be found to be due to B. on that day.

(2) This letter was followed by a tender, which was not accepted. On a bill filed by B. for specific performance of the agreement to execute a partnership deed for one-eighth share of the profits, A. put in an answer in which he denied that there had been a partnership at all, but submitted that if any partnership had ever existed it was only a partnership at will, of one-eighth share of the profits, payment of which he offered to make, & he submitted that this partnership had been determined by the letter of Aug. 1872:—Held: it had not been determined by that letter, but the answer had the effect of putting an end to it; & accounts must be directed to be taken as up to the day of filing the answer, & these accounts must include the principal, the eighth share of the profits, & also the eighth share of the assets up to that day.

(3) A co-partnership in profits is a co-partnership in the assets by which the profits are made.

(4) In order to bring a case within Partnership Act, 1865 (c. 86), there must be a contract in writing, & the document must show on the face of it that the transaction is one of loan, & parol testimony to vary it is inadmissible.

(5) In a case like the present the Ct. of Ch. has power, in its discretion, to grant either a sale of the undertaking as a going concern, or a proposal for a purchase, by the holder of the seven-eighth share, of the one-eighth share mentioned in the agreement. The House, under the circumstance here, adopted the latter course.—SYERS v. SYERS (1876), 1 App. Cas. 174; 35 L. T. 101; 24 W. R. 970, H. L.

B.'s services were to be the consideration for the agreement, & he was not to charge for his time & trouble, but only actual disbursements made by him for the benefit of the estate & for realising it for A. & B.'s mutual benefit:—Held: the agreement constituted a partnership between the parties, & a dissolution was declared.—MOORE v. DAVIS (1879), 11 Ch. One brother died, having devised his one third share to a nephew, & he & the two surviving brothers, B. & W., continued to carry on the farming business. The nephew sold his one third share of the farm & lands to his uncles B. & W., the conveyance being to them as joint tenants, & they continued to carry on the farming business. B. died, having given all his property to his wife. The farm & lands were subsequently sold. W. claimed, as surviving joint tenant, the proceeds of sale, representing the one third share purchased from the nephew:—Held: the one third share became involved in partnership dealings, & must be regarded as partnership property & W. was entitled to only moiety of the proceeds of sale.—DAVIES v. GAMES (1879), 12 Ch. (2) Partners in a business borrowed money on the security of freehold premises of which they were tenants in common, & expended the money in adding a part of those premises to adjoining workshops in which the business was carried on & of which the partners were co-owners:—Held: Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 20 (3), applied, & the addition to the workshops did not become partnership property so as upon the death of one of the partners to descend as personalty.

It is not the law that partners in business, who are the owners of the property by means of which the business is carried on, are necessarily partners as regards that property (NORTH, J.).—DAVIS v. DAVIS, [1894] 1 Ch. 393; 63 L. J. Ch. 219; 70 L. T. 265; 42 W. R. 312; 8 R. 133.

51. —— —— Partnership in business concerned.]—R. being in possession of mines & ironworks, held under leases of unequal duration, by his will bequeathed £25,000 to B., "as a capital for him to become a partner with my exor. of one-fourth share in the trade of all those works, so long as the lease endures," with a devise to H. & his wife of the residue of his estates, real & personal; by a codicil testator gave to W. three-eighths of the concern at the iron-works, "so the partnership will stand at my decease, W. three-eighths, H. three-eighths, B. two-eighths." After testator's death, W., H. & B., carried on the works for two years, selling iron manufactured not only from the produce of their mines, but from ore & old iron purchased for the purpose of manufacture and resale. B. having then assigned his share to W., the business was carried on in like manner by W. & H. till the death of the latter; no agreement having ever been entered into for the duration of the partnership:—Held: (1) the codicil withdrew the trade from the operation of the residuary clause in the will, & vested three-eighths in H. to the exclusion of his wife; (2) the concern was not a mere joint interest in land, but a partnership in trade; (3) the purchase of a leasehold interest as part of a stock in trade, was not evidence of an agreement to contract a partnership commensurate with the duration of the lease. (4) The partnership was dissolved by the death of H.

So death terminates a partnership (LORD ELDON, C.). (5) In a suit instituted by W., praying a sale of the partnership property, the ct. on motion, directed an inquiry whether it would be for the benefit of all parties interested that the works should be sold, or carried on for the purpose of winding up the concern.

(6) Where the contract neither expressly nor by reference limits the duration, the partnership may be terminated at a moment's notice by either party.

(7) For ordinary purposes a lease is no more than stock-in-trade, & as part of the stock may be sold; nor would it be material that the estate purchased by a partnership was freehold, if intended only as an article of stock; though, a question might in that case arise on the death of a partner, whether it would pass as real estate, or as stock, personal estate in enjoyment, though freehold in nature & quality (LORD ELDON, C.).—CRAWSHAY v. MAULE, MAULE v. CRAWSHAY (1818), 1 Swan. 495; 1 Wils. Several persons, who had no general partnership, nor any connection with each other in trade, formed an adventure to the East Indies. The outfit of the vessel was a joint concern of all the partners; & that delivers the case from one consideration, namely, the parcel of copper for sheathing the ship; which is admitted to be a partnership concern. D. provided the company, had the selection of the pieces to be represented, together with the entire management of their representation, & exclusive control over the persons employed in the theatre. K., on his part, paid for printing & advertising, furnished the lighting, door keepers, scene shifters & supernumeraries, & hired the band, music being a necessary part of the performance. The money taken at the door was taken by servants of K., who retained one-half of the gross receipts as his remuneration for the use of the theatre, & handed the other half to D. Among the pieces represented were two which L. had the sole liberty of representing or causing to be represented, etc., as assignee of the author, under Dramatic Literary Property Acts, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, & 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45:—Held: no action under those statutes was maintainable by L. against K., as the above facts did not show that those pieces had been represented, etc., by him, or that there was a partnership between D. & him so as to render him liable for the representation, etc., of them by D.—LYON v. KNOWLES (1864), 5 B. & S. 751; 10 L. proportion of one-fifth to pltf. & four-fifths to deft., it being stipulated that the building in which the business was carried on should remain the property of deft. —— ——.]—Although an agreement for participation in profit & loss is primâ facie evidence of a partnership between the contracting parties as between themselves, yet the question of partnership must in all cases depend upon the intention of the parties as it appears on the contract. By an agreement between pltf. & the firm of H. & co., the members of which were the two defts., it was agreed that for the part taken by pltf. in the business, he should receive a fixed salary of £180, & in addition should receive one-eighth share of the net profits, & bear one-eighth share of the losses, as shown by the books when balanced; & pltf. agreed to advance £1,500 to the business. The agreement was to be determined on four months' notice on either side. Pltf. had been previously a clerk to defts., & he continued to perform similar duties after the execution of the agreement, & was not introduced to the customers as a member of the firm, & did not sign the name of the firm to bills. Defts. being dissatisfied with pltf. gave him notice to determine the agreement & excluded him from the place of business. Pltf. brought an action for winding-up the partnership, & moved for an injunction & receiver. The judge refused the motion, on the terms of defts. paying £1,500 into ct.:—Held: on the true construction of this agreement pltf. was in the position of a servant, & there was no such partnership between pltf. & defts. as to entitle pltf. to an injunction or receiver.—WALKER v. HIRSCH (1884), 27 Ch. A. B. to charter the Brockelbank, or any other suitable vessel, for that purpose, on the best possible terms, & to make the necessary arrangements for her running on the station during the whole or such part of the winter as may be deemed expedient, on our joint account, each of us taking a proportionate interest in this enterprise, according to the amount subscribed, & the profit or loss to be divided amongst us in proportion to our subscription. In order to form a fund for defraying the necessary expenses, we have each of us paid 10 per cent. on the amount of our subscriptions, and we hereby bind ourselves, & agree to pay to Mr. G. A. B. such further instalments, each of us in proportion to his subscription, as it may be necessary to call from time to time, should the earnings of the boat not be sufficient to pay the expenses. It being, however, understood that our liability is not to extend beyond the amount subscribed by us respectively":—Held: this agreement constituted a partnership between the parties who signed it; & pltf., who had paid such debts arising from the undertaking as the earnings of the boat were insufficient to satisfy, could not maintain an action for money paid, against deft. who had not paid up his subscription, but that the proper form of action was a special action of assumpsit for the non-performance of the undertaking to pay pltf. the instalments from time to time.—BROWN v. TAPSCOTT (1840), 6 M. & W. 119; 9 L. The cargo arrived, but the result was a heavy loss, & two of the firms became unable to meet their engagements:—Held: this was a joint mercantile adventure on the part of all five firms, & the deficiency arising from the failure of two of them was a loss which must be borne equally by the three solvent firms, & not by pltfs. alone.—MCINROY v. HARGROVE (1867), 16 L. Y. purchased produce with his own moneys & consigned it for sale on his account to T., drawing bills against the consignments, & at the same time informing T. of the interest which A. had in the transaction. A., without the knowledge of Y., wrote a letter to T., pledging his interest in the consignment to secure an antecedent debt of his own to T. T. having failed to meet the bills, & the goods consigned not having been resold, T. claims an interest in the goods under the pledge by A.:—Held: the arrangement between Y. & A. constituted no such partnership as to entitled A. or any one claiming under him to an interest in the goods themselves as against Y.—ALFARO v. DE LA TORRE (1876), 34 L. Pltfs. claimed to recover from deft. half the loss which they had incurred in Stock Exchange transactions which they had entered into on behalf of R., who had been introduced to them by deft. :—Held : deft. having an interest in the transactions, equally with pltfs., & the main object of the contract being to regulate the terms of deft.'s employment, the principle of Couturier v. Hastie (1852), 8 Ex. 40, applied, & the contract was not within Stat. 90. Share of profit & loss by retiring partner—On dissolution.]—J. & W. carried on business under a deed of partnership dated May 30, 1895. In Oct. 1907, a bank advanced the partners jointly the sum of £11,000. On Sept. 20, 1909, J. & W. purported to dissolve the partnership & W. retired from the business. By the deed of that date W. assigned his share & interest to J., & an account was to be taken of W.'s share as on Dec. 31, 1909, & such share when ascertained was to be credited to W. in the books of the firm & was to remain a loan to the firm for ten years, at 5 per cent. per annum interest. If on the taking of this account there was found an insufficiency of assets to meet liabilities, W. was to pay J. half of such deficit. On Nov. 4, 1909, J. suspended payment, & was adjudicated bkpt. on Jan. 7, 1910, & on July 25, 1910, W. was adjudicated bkpt., the two bkpcies. subsequently being consolidated. The trustee of the separate estate of J. claimed a sum of £1,657 lying on current account at the bank on Nov. 4, 1909, in the name of the firm, which sum the bank claimed to retain & set off against the joint liability of W. & J. for £11,000 advanced to the firm :—Held : upon the true construction of the deed of Sept. 20, 1909, there was a dissolution of partnership as from that date & not as from Dec. 31, 1909, so that the sum standing to the credit of the firm on Nov. 4, 1909, belonged to the separate estate of J.—Re JANE, Ex p. THE TRUSTEE (1914), 110 L. 91. How far conclusive of partnership.]—(1) It is often said that the test, or one of the tests, whether a person not ostensibly a partner, is nevertheless, in contemplation of law, a partner, is, whether he is entitled to participate in the profits. This, no doubt, is, in general, a sufficiently accurate test ; for a right to participate in profits affords cogent, often conclusive evidence, that the trade in which the profits have been made, was carried on in part for or on behalf of the person setting up such a claim. But the real ground of the liability is, that the trade has been carried on by persons acting on his behalf. When that is the case, he is liable to the trade obligations, & entitled to its profits, or to a share of them. It is not strictly correct to say that his right to share in the profits makes him liable to the debts of the trade. The correct mode of stating the proposition is to say that the same thing which entitles him to the one makes him liable to the other, namely, the fact that the trade has been carried on on his behalf, i.e., that he stood in the relation of principal towards the persons acting ostensibly as the traders, by whom the liabilities have been incurred, & under whose management the profits have been made. Taking this to be the ground of liability as a partner, it seems to me to follow that the mere concurrence of creditors in an arrangement under which they permit their debtor, or trustees for their debtor, to continue his trade, applying the profits in discharge of their demands, does not make them partners with their debtor, or the trustees. The debtor is still the person solely interested in the profits, save only that he has mortgaged them to his creditors. He receives the benefit of the profits as they accrue, though he has precluded himself from applying them to any other purpose than the discharge of his debts. The trade is not carried on by or on account of the creditors ; though their consent is necessary in such a case, for without it all the property might be seized by them in execution. But the trade still remains the trade of the debtor or his trustees ; the debtor or the trustees are the persons by or on behalf of whom it is carried on (LORD CRANWORTH).

(2) The liability of one partner for the acts of his co-partner is, in truth, the liability of a principal for the acts of his agent. Where two or more persons are engaged as partners in an ordinary trade, each of them has an implied authority from the others to bind them all by contracts entered into according to the usual course of business in that trade. Every partner in trade is, for the ordinary purposes of the trade, the agent of his co-partners, & all are therefore liable for the ordinary trade contracts of the others. Partners may stipulate amongst themselves that some one of them only shall enter into particular contracts, or into any contracts, or that as to certain of their contracts none shall be liable except those by whom they are actually made; but with such private arrangements third persons dealing with the firm without notice have no concern. The public have a right to assume that every partner has authority from his co-partners to bind the whole firm in contracts made according to the ordinary usages of trade (LORD CRANWORTH).—COX v. HICKMAN (1860), 8 H. 92. ——.]—The law of partnership is a branch of the law of agency, & the test of partnership is not simply whether the alleged partner was to receive a share of profits, but whether he constituted his alleged co-partners his agents for carrying on business. 94. ——.]—(1) S., being about to commence business as an underwriter at Lloyd's, through the agency of one F., in consideration of deft., the father of S., engaging with F. to hold a sum of £5,000 available for his son for the purpose of carrying out the arrangement, gave deft. the following memorandum: "In consideration of your guaranteeing me to the extent of £5,000 in my business of underwriter, until by such business I shall make or acquire from the profits thereof £5,000 after providing for all known losses, I hereby promise & agree to pay to you during your life, in case I shall so long live, an annuity of £500, being equal to 10 per cent. per annum on £5,000; &, further, that if at the end of three years from the date hereof, it shall appear that one-fourth of the net average annual profits during that period made by me in the said business shall amount to more than £500 the said annuity shall thenceforth be increased to a yearly sum equal to one-fourth of such net average annual profits made by me in the said business during the said three years"; & the memorandum concluded with these words: "Moreover, in no case are you to be considered as a partner with me in the said business of an underwriter":—Held: the above memorandum did not constitute deft. a partner with his son.

91 xvi. ——.]—A partnership is constituted whenever the parties have agreed to carry on business or to share the profits in some way in common.—

(2) By a settlement afterwards made on his marriage, S. assigned to deft. & D., as trustees, "all & singular the sums of money, earnings, profits, & emoluments which are now in the hands of F., & all such as shall hereafter come into the hands of F., on account or in respect of the said underwriting business." The deed also contained a power of attorney authorising deft. & his co-trustee to receive the whole proceeds of the business; & the first trust was, to pay deft. £500 a year, with an additional sum when the profits of the business should have realised a given sum, & a covenant that, when the accumulated profits should have reached £8,500, & continued at that amount without reduction for two years, the trustee should re-assign to S. "the said moneys & profits arising from the aforesaid underwriting business." In an action upon a policy signed by Fenn in the name of S., a special case was stated in which were set out the above-mentioned memorandum & marriage-settlement, & by which it was agreed that the ct. should draw any reasonable inferences of fact:—Held: the marriage-settlement did not, either alone or in conjunction with the memorandum, render deft. liable as a partner with S. in his underwriting business.

The test . . . is whether it is such a participation of profits as to constitute the relation of principal & agent between the person taking the profits & those actually carrying on the business (BLACKBURN, J.).—BULLEN v. SHARP (1865), L. R.

The agreement also provided that A. was to be paid 3*d.* per ton on all coal & iron-stone by way of commission; that B. was to receive a salary, which was not to commence until all the moneys advanced by A. had been repaid; that "after payment of the above, & the royalties, & rents, & costs of raising & preparing, & delivering to market the produce of the mines." A. was to be entitled to three-fourths, & B. to one-fourth, of the net profits; & A. was "to be free from all liability except in respect of the money advanced by him." B. worked the mines under the name of the L. co. In 1874 A. died, & there was then due to him, £11,000, in respect of advances made by him to B. under the said agreement. The mines proved a failure, & the creditors of the co., B. being insolvent, sent in their claims to the exors. of A., alleging that A. was a partner in the co. by virtue of the agreement, & by reason of his interference in the management & working of the co.:—Held: upon the agreement, no partnership existed between A. & B., &, upon the evidence, there was no ground for inferring that A. had held himself out in any way to any person as a partner in the co.—DEAN v. HARRIS, HARRIS v. BUTTERFIELD (1875), 33 L. 98. ——.]—Participation in profits, although strong evidence, is not conclusive evidence of a partnership. The question of partnership must be decided by the intention of the parties, to be ascertained from the contents of the written instruments, if any, & the conduct of the parties. Pltf. advanced money to a contractor to enable him to carry out a contract with a railway co. for the construction of a railway, & the parties executed a deed by which the contractor assigned to pltf. all his machinery, plant, etc., & all shares & debentures he might receive from the co. to secure the repayment of the loan. The deed contained the following provisions: (1) that pltf. should receive 10 per cent. interest on the money advanced & 10 per cent. of the net profits of the contract; (2) that the contractor should apply all the moneys advanced in carrying on the works; (3) that if the contractor should become bkpt., pltf. might enter & complete the works; (4) that pltf. might sell the property in case of default, but that he should not sell the shares or debentures within twelve months after the completion of the contract; (5) that in calculating the net profits the contractor should be allowed to draw out £1,000 a year for his services. Letters passed between pltf. & the contractor in which the money advanced was spoken of as "capital" & "working capital," & expressions were used showing that both parties had a common interest in the works:—Held: the stipulations in the deed & the expressions in the correspondence were all consistent with the object of securing repayment of the money advanced, & were not sufficient evidence of a partnership between the parties.—BADELEY v. CONSOLIDATED BANK (1888), 38 Ch. 103. —— Receipt of profits by executor of deceased partner.]—By articles of partnership T., W., & S. agreed to carry on the business of auctioneers in partnership for seven years; they were to contribute capital & to share profit & loss equally; & if either died during the partnership term, the surviving members of the firm were to continue the business, & were to pay to the personal representatives of deceased partner the share of the profits to which he would have been entitled if living. T. died during the partnership term. At the time of his death the firm had no capital, except office furniture & fittings worth about £100. They had in their hands a sum of between £400 & £500 which was the proceeds of debts due to a former firm in which T. was a member, & left in the hands of the new firm for collection; & this sum belonged beneficially to T.; T. was also entitled in respect of his share of profits, beyond the amounts which he had drawn, to a sum of about £200. After the death of T., the surviving members of the firm continued to carry on the business, to collect the debts due to the old firm, & to earn profits. The exors. of T. never interfered in the business, but they claimed, under the articles of partnership, the share of profits to which T. would have been entitled if living. No settlement of accounts in respect of T.'s interest in the partnership business was made between his exors. & the surviving partners. Sums of money amounting in the whole to about £625 were from time to time paid by the firm to the exors.; these payments were made generally, & not on any particular account. After the death of T., the firm were employed by pltf. to sell property; they sold the property & received the proceeds, but did not pay over the same to pltf. In an action brought, after the death of S., against the exors. of T. & W.:—Held: the exors. of T. were not liable as partners.—HOLME v. HAMMOND (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 218; 41 L. J. Ex. 157; 20 W. 104. —— Receipt of fixed sum out of profits.]—A contract that a person shall receive a fixed sum "out of the profits" of a business is equivalent to a contract that he shall receive "a share of the profits" within Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 2 (3) (d).

Under a written contract A. lent B. £500 for his business. A. was to have the sole control & management of the business, & an option was given him, which was not exercised, of becoming a partner with B. in the business within a certain time. For the use of his money A. was to be paid the weekly sum of £3, afterwards reduced to £2, "out of the profits" of the business. B. was to draw like weekly sums. B. having become bkpt., A. claimed to prove for the money he had advanced:—Held: under the circumstances, A. was not a partner; but he was in the position of a person who was receiving a "share of the profits" of the business within the meaning of the Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 2 (3) (d), & therefore could not prove until all the other creditors had been satisfied.—Re YOUNG, Ex p. JONES, [1896] 2 Q. 107. After death of partner—Share of profits payable to assigns of deceased partner.]—A deed of partnership for life between two solrs. contained a covenant that on the death of either the survivor should, during the joint lives of himself & the widow of deceased partner, pay to such person or persons as deceased partner should appoint, an annuity of £200 per annum, or one-fourth of the annual profits of the survivor, as the survivor should elect, & also provided for the admission on certain conditions of a son of deceased partner into the "said" partnership business. One of the partners, by an ante-nuptial settlement made shortly after the execution of the partnership deed, exercised the power of appointment in favour of his wife, & several years afterwards died greatly indebted to the firm. The survivor continued to practise as a solr. for some years, & realised profits by his business, if estimated without regard to the former business, but they were insufficient to make good the outstanding liabilities of the late partnership, & he became bkpt. without having made any payment to the widow of deceased partner or electing between the two modes of payment mentioned in the articles:—Held: (1) the assignees were entitled to make the election; (2) on their electing not to pay the annuity of £200, the widow had no provable demand, the business carried on by the survivor being, according to the true construction of the deed, a continuation of the partnership business, & the payments made on account of the partnership being properly set off against the profits of the sole business.—Re JONES, Ex p. HARPER (1857), 1 De G. & J. 180; 26 L. 108. After sale of business—Purchase price in part undetermined—Unpaid portion to carry share of profits.]—By a power of attorney, B., who was one of the four partners in a firm of dyers carrying on business at D. under the style of B. & co., appointed his brother E. his attorney to sell or concur in selling any of his real, leasehold or personal property to any person or persons, "upon such terms, subject to such special or other conditions, & in such manner" as the attorney should approve, & also to sign any deeds that ought to be executed" & generally to do, negotiate, transact, & perfect all & any other act, deed, matter, or thing whatsoever . . . for the transacting, settling, & adjusting all other my estate, affairs, tradings, & concerns whatsoever"; & with full power & authority to act as fully & effectually as if he were personally present & did the same himself. E., acting for himself as a partner, & also under his power of attorney on behalf of B., joined with the other partners of the firm in executing a contract for the sale of the business to H. Amongst other things, it was agreed that H. should pay the debts of the business, which were estimated at £15,000; if they did not exceed that amount the vendors were to be entitled to a share of profits calculated on £5,000 "deferred capital"; if the debts exceeded £15,000, £5 for every £2 of the excess was to be deducted from the £5,000 deferred capital; the vendors might require H. to take over their deferred capital, paying in cash two-fifths of its nominal amount; if the concern was converted into a limited co., the vendors were to receive shares for their deferred capital; & if the debts were less than £15,000, H. was to pay the difference in cash at the end of two years. It was agreed that H. might carry on the business under the style of B. & co., & that the vendors should not carry on any like business within fifty miles of D. H. brought an action for specific performance:—Held: the provisions as to deferred capital were only a way of ascertaining the purchase-money, & did not constitute a partnership; & therefore the agreement was not void against B., on the ground that the power of attorney did not authorise an agreement for a partnership.—HAWKSLEY v. OUTRAM, [1892] 3 Ch. 359; 62 L. 109. —— Payment of annuity as part of purchase price—Payment not stated to be out of profits.]—S. sold to G. the trade name & goodwill of the business carried on by her late husband. It was stated by A. that in Dec. 1848, it was agreed between him & B. that the salary should be at the rate of £250 a year, from June, 1844, & that the reason that such arrangement was not made before was that B. was engaged in making experiments in a certain manufacture, from which he hoped to derive a considerable fortune, out of which A. expected to be paid. a right to rely for payment. Yet the receipt of a percentage upon the gross amount of sales made to certain customers, by the person who recommended such customers, does not constitute him a partner as against third persons. A., who was concerned in a colliery, in the year 1830, built & stocked a general shop in its neighbourhood, for the purpose of supplying goods to the work-people, placing B. there to conduct the business; A. receiving for his own use 7 per cent. upon the amount of the gross sales made to the miners; & B. taking all the rest of the profits of the concern, from whatever source derived. A.'s name appeared over the shop door, & in the excise licences; &, down to the year 1834, all the goods supplied to the shop were purchased & paid for by or in the name of A. In that year it was agreed between A. & B., that the latter should thenceforward buy all goods that were required for the shop, & that the former should receive only 5 per cent. upon the amount of sales to the miners. After this new arrangement had been come to, B., who had several other shops, opened an account with a bank at Holywell, &, on the failure of the bank in 1839, there was a balance due to the bankers on that account exceeding £2,000. There was no evidence to show that credit was in fact given to A. by the bank, or that they were aware that his name had been placed over the shop door, or that they supposed him to be a partner at the time the debt was contracted. In an action by the assignees of the bankers against A. & B., to recover the balance, the jury having negatived the existence of an actual partnership between A. & B., or that A. had, with his own permission, been held out as a partner, the ct. refused to disturb the verdict.—POTT (OR POTTS) v. EYTON & JONES (1846), 3 C. They drew & accepted bills under the same title, & executed a deed which described them as co-partners:—Held: nevertheless, after the death of the son, in 1862, upon the evidence, that they were not partners inter se. The circumstances relied on were: the absence of any division of profits in the books, which were kept by the son, the absence of proof of the son's having any capital or being entitled to receive any share of the profits, the fact of his having, when he ceased to reside with his father, made no request for an account of the profits, but accepted £1 a week as a remuneration until his death, six months afterwards & the testimony of the members of the family.—RADCLIFFE v. RUSHWORTH (1864), 33 Reav. 484; 55 E. The bill prayed that the notice of expulsion was invalid on the ground of mala fides, & because pltf. had no opportunity of being heard in his defence, & that his arrangement with Z. was not a breach of the arts. :—Held : (1) pltf.'s transactions with Z. although not amounting to a partnership, were a breach of arts. ; (2) no notice of intention to expel or opportunity of defence was necessary, & the expulsion was valid. This was a breach of a specific clause & analogous, therefore, to a covenant in a lease, which distinguished the case from Blisset v. Daniel & Wood v. Woad, Nos. 1674, 1675, post, which were cases of expulsion under a general power in which bona fides must be proved & opportunity of defence given.—COOPER v. PAGE (1876), 34 L. The trader having become bkpt. :—Held : the above stipulation was so vague as to be incapable of receiving any certain construction ; as it could not be separated from the rest of the agreement, the ct. could not treat the contract as being one which the lender was to receive "a rate of interest varying with the profits" within Partnership Act, 1865 (c. 86), s. 1 ; & the lender's claim was consequently not one which, by reason of section 5 of that Act, ought to be postponed to those of the other creditors of the bkpt.—Re VINCE, Ex p. BAXTER, [1892] 2 Q. 142. —— ——.]—S. in Dec. 1910, lent the firm of R. A. & co. sums amounting to £13,325 for the purposes of a commercial adventure in Mexico, upon the terms that the loan was repayable with interest at 5 per cent. or, at the option of the lender, together with a share in the profits of the venture. S. decided in lieu of interest to receive shares in the proposed co. The co. was never formed, & in Apr. 1911, the terms of the agreement were varied, S. continuing to lend the money in consideration of 5 per cent. interest & a proportion of any profits realised out of the Mexican venture. No profits were ever realised therefrom, & in Aug. 1911, the firm of R. A. & co. became financially embarrassed. Thereupon S. undertook to release the firm from their liability in consideration of the individual members of the firm accepting bills for the amount of the loan, & an ultimate guarantee being given by the firm for their due payment.

In the ensuing bkpcy. S. claimed to prove for the full amount of his debt against the joint estate of the firm:—Held: the release of the firm's liability in Aug. 1911, & the substitution therefor of the liability of the several partners, constituted a new agreement, & S. under the guarantee of Aug. 1911, could prove for his debt against the joint estate of the bkpt. firm in competition with the other creditors. Semble: the transaction, although originally within the mischief of Partnership Act, 1840 (c. 39), ss. 2, 3, ceased to be so when in Apr. 1911, the source of any intended profits failed & the advance became a mere loan at interest. The term "business" in the Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 2 (3) (d), applies not merely to a lifelong or universal business but to any separate commercial venture in which a trader or firm of traders embarks.—Re ABENHEIM, Ex p. ABENHEIM (1913), 109 L. V. & co.; & E. accordingly advanced the £2,000, upon which the words "& co." were added to the original firm; but no other act was done by E. to show that he considered himself as a partner, & he refused to sign any formal agreement for a partnership:—Held: this was not sufficient to constitute him a partner with B. & S. V. so as to prevent him from proving the amount of his advances as a debt due from them to him, under a fiat issued against B. & S. V.—Re VANDERPLANK, Ex p. TURQUAND (1841), 2 Mont. In an action for wrongfully dismissing pltf. from his employment as a Parliamentary reporter for a newspaper, & also for work & labour, it was sought to fix deft. with liability as a partner, upon the ground that he had advanced money for starting the paper, under a written agreement with H., containing very stringent stipulations showing that deft. was to have unlimited control over the publication, with the option of declaring himself a partner at any time within twelve months, & to trust solely to the profits for the re-payment of his advance, with interest, & by parol evidence of personal interference in the management. At the trial it was assumed that the agreement alone did not constitute a partnership between deft. & H.; & the jury, having found that pltf.'s engagement was not for the session, but a weekly engagement only, & negatived that deft. had prior to pltf.'s engagement allowed himself to be held out as a partner, but affirmed that he had done so since, returned a verdict for pltf. for £15 15*s.*—COURTENAY v. WAGSTAFF, REED v. WAGSTAFF (1864), 16 C. R. died in 1861, without exercising his right of nomination, & in 1863, J. became bkpt. 171. —— ——.]—A partnership having been dissolved by mutual consent, & proper notices of the dissolution given, the mere fact that the retiring partner allows the continuing partner to carry on business in the old firm name is not such a "holding out" of the former as a partner as will render him liable for a debt of the firm contracted after the dissolution with a person who had not dealt with the old firm, & who had no knowledge of the dissolution.

The doctrine of "holding out" is a branch of the doctrine of estoppel, & it says that, if a man holds himself out to be a partner & makes a man act upon that supposition, he cannot afterwards say that he is not a partner. Estoppel can only be relied upon by a person towards whom some act has been done or to whom some statement has been made, when he has acted upon the faith of such act or statement (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—Re FRASER, Ex p. CENTRAL BANK OF LONDON, [1892] 2 Q. The name of H. was, for some time, used as a partner in all the transactions of the trade; but no arts. were ever entered into between his uncle & him, nor was any part of the stock or profits received by or made good to him. This was held to be only a nominal partnership, & H. entitled to no account.—JACOBSEN v. HENNEKENIUS (1714), 5 Bro. Parl. Cas. 482 ; 2 E. R. 811, H. L.

174. —— Quasi partner in receipt of salary.]—One, who receives a salary, not charged upon profits, according to a known, though nice, distinction is not by that a partner ; but if, retiring, or coming into the trade, he suffers his name to be used, it is of no consequence whether he has a salary, or sum of money, to be paid by others, or to be got out of the profits. It is the use of the name that makes him liable, as one of the persons, by & to whom every thing is bought & sold (LORD ELDON, C.).—Ex p. WATSON (1815), 19 Ves. 459 ; 34 E. R. 587, L. C.

175. —— Quasi partner indemnified against possibility of loss.]—A. & B. carried on business together as solrs. in partnership, & held themselves out as such, & deft. employed them in that capacity. By the agreement under which A. & B. entered into business together, B. was to receive annually out of the profits the sum of £300, but he was not to be in any manner liable to the losses of the business, & was to have a lien on the profits for any losses he might sustain by reason of his liability as a partner :—Held : A. & B. were properly joined as pltfs. in an action for work & labour, as the money, when recovered, would be the joint property of both until the accounts were ascertained & the division took place.—BOND v. PITTARD (1838), 3 M. & W. 357 ; 1 Horn. & H. 82 ; 7 L. 176. —— Quasi partner employed merely as servant.]—Where a trader arranged with his paid servant to set up in the name & style of a supposed firm as a merchant, & there was evidence to show that the latter had an interest in the concern : —Held : whether or not they were partners they might be jointly liable as contractors for goods ordered by the servant in the name of the supposed firm in the way of its apparent business, the employer as the real principal, the servant as holding himself out as partner.—KIRKWOOD, Re CHEETHAM (1862), 10 W. 177. —— ——.]—Pltf., having had no previous dealings with the firm, & knowing them only by reputation, applied at the place of business of "Gandell & co." for orders for goods : the firm then consisting of Thomas Gandell only, & being managed by Edward Gandell, a clerk. On pltf. asking to see Messrs. Gandell, Edward Gandell presented himself, & so conducted himself as to lead pltf. to suppose that he was one of the firm of Gandell & co. & had authority to order goods on their behalf, which was not the fact. Pltf. sent goods, according to Edward Gandell's order, to the place of business of Gandell & co., an invoice being made out, by Edward Gandell's direction, to the name of "Edward Gandell & co." Edward Gandell, unknown to pltf., carried on business with one at another place ; & the goods were, within three or four days of their delivery, pledged with deft. with a power of sale, to secure advances bonâ fide made by him to Gandell & Todd, & he sold them under the power without notice from pltf. :—Held : there was no contract of sale, inasmuch as pltf. intended to contract with Gandell & co. & not with Edward Gandell personally, Gandell & co. were not contracting parties ; no property therefore passed, & pltf. was entitled to recover the value of the goods from deft.—HARDMAN v. BOOTH (1863), 1 H. & C. 803 ; 1 New Rep. 240 ; 32 L. 179. Person representing himself as sole partner -Whether personally liable.]—To an action for goods sold, deft. pleaded in abatement, that the debt became due from him jointly with S. It appeared at the trial, that the business of deft.'s house was carried on, with the knowledge of pltfs., under the name of "Bush & co.," & that the invoice of the goods in question was made out to "Bush & co.," & also that the real partnership was between deft. S. The judge directed the jury, that the partnership was fully proved ; but still, that, if deft. gave pltfs. reason to believe that he alone constituted the firm of Bush & co., he would be solely liable :—Held : the direction was right, & deft. was not liable unless he alone constituted the firm, or so held himself out to pltfs.—BONFIELD v. SMITH (1844), 12 M. & W. 405 ; 13 L. Deft. never did in terms declare his option to accept the shares : but he went down to the mine, made inquiries & obtained reports as to the condition & prospects of the mine & as to the cost of an engine to be used there, & on one occasion assisted in paying the miners' wages : he also permitted the captain of the mine, without contradiction, to represent him as a capitalist from London who had a large interest in the mine, & intended to work it vigorously. In an action by a person who had supplied goods to the mine upon the faith of representations by the captain that the mine was being worked by a person of substance whose name he was not authorised to give :—Held : the above was evidence from which the jury were warranted in inferring that deft. was a partner, although his name was never mentioned, personal identification being sufficient.—MARTYN v. GRAY (1863), 14 C. SUB-SECT. 2.—SUFFICIENCY OF REPRESENTATION.

181. To constitute general partnership.]—(1) Persons might be partners in a particular concern or business, but notwithstanding, if they did not appear to the world as partners it should not be sufficient to constitute a general partnership & make them liable in other cases not connected with such particular business (LORD KENYON).

(2) Though in point of fact parties are not partners in trade, yet if one so represents himself & by that means gets credit for goods for the other, both shall be liable (LORD KENYON).—DE BERKOM v. SMITH & LEWIS (1793), 1 Esp. 29; 170 E. R. 270, N. P.

182. Representation of intention.]—It being in contemplation to form a co. for distilling whisky, the following prospectus was issued in May, 1825: "The conditions upon which this establishment is formed are, the concern will be divided into twenty shares of £100 each, five of which to belong to A. the founder of the works; the other fifteen subscribers to pay in their subscriptions to M. & co., bankers, Liverpool, in such proportions as may be called for. The concern to be under the management of a committee of three of the subscribers, to be chosen annually on Oct. 10; ten per cent. to be paid into the bank on or before June 1 next":—Held: this prospectus imported only that a co. was to be formed, not that it was actually formed, & a person who subscribed his name to this prospectus, & who was present at a meeting of subscribers when it was proposed to take certain premises for the purpose of carrying on the distillery, which were afterwards taken, & solicited others to become shareholders, but never paid his subscription, was not chargeable as a partner for goods supplied to the co.—BOURNE v. FREETH (1829), 9 B. & C. 632; L. & Welsb. 1; 4 Man. & Ry. 183. ——.]—Deft. from 1829 till 1833 advanced various sums with a view to a partnership in a market about to be erected; knew that the money was applied towards the erection; & was consulted in every stage: in Oct. 1833, by a written agreement, it was settled that the market should be valued, & that deft. should have a seventh share:—Held: he was not liable as a partner till Oct. 1833, notwithstanding profits had been made, but not accounted for to him, before that time.—HOWELL v. BRODIE (1839), 6 Bing. N. C. 44; 8 Scott, 372; 9 L. J. C. P. 19; 133 E. R. 17.

184. Representation subsequent to transaction sued upon.]—When a party is charged as partner, on the ground of his having held himself out as such, he can only be affected by acts of holding out prior to the contract.

Those acts [subsequent acts] are only to be considered as evidence rendering more likely the acts of holding out before the contract. The holding out which makes a man liable as partner must of course be before the contract (BRAMWELL, B.).—BAIRD v. PLANQUE (1858), 1 F. & F. 344, N. P.

187. ——.]—By an agreement between A., the owner of a ship, & B. & C., the ship was to be placed under the management of B. & C., to load outwards from Liverpool with a cargo for The Cape, Singapore, etc., consigned to their houses at these several ports. Before proceeding on the voyage, the captain received from B. & C., a letter of instructions, desiring him to proceed on his return from Singapore to The Cape, in which letter was the following passage:—"on your arrival there, you will call upon our managing partner D., & follow such directions there as he may give you regarding such part of the cargo as is consigned to his firm, & which he requires to be landed there." At Singapore, B. & C. shipped coffee for London, to be delivered to the shippers' order, pursuant to bills of lading signed by the captain, & indorsed, without his knowledge, to certain persons in London. When the ship arrived at The Cape, the coffee being found to be in a heated state, was, by the orders of D., unshipped & sold. A. was afterwards compelled to pay the consignees of the coffee for the non-delivery thereof. D. being examined upon interrogatories, expressly stated that he was not a partner with B. & C. In case brought by A. against B. & C., for wrongfully unshipping & selling certain coffee at The Cape of Good Hope, the declaration alleged, that "defts., by their agents, at the said several ports, had & exercised the management & direction, ordering, control & government of the ship, touching & in relation to the loading & unloading & freighting the same, & the consignment & disposition of the outward & homeward cargo thereof":—Held: the description given of D. by B. & C. in their letter of instructions, was not conclusive on them as to the point of his being a partner.—BROCKBANK v. ANDERSON (1844), 7 Man. & G. 295; 7 Scott, N. 193. —— Necessity for.]—A prospectus was issued for a distillery co. with a capital of £600,000 & 12,000 shares, & to be conducted pursuant to the terms of a deed to be drawn up. All persons who did not execute the deed within thirty days after it was ready, were to forfeit all interest in the concern. No more than 7,500 shares were ever allotted; only 2,300 persons paid the first deposit; only 1,106 the second, & only 65 signed the deed; & the directors, after the time for paying the second instalment had elapsed, advertised that persons who had omitted to pay had forfeited their interest in the concern:—Held: an application for shares, & payment of the first deposit, did not constitute a partner, one, who had not otherwise interfered in the concern, & the insertion of his name by the secretary of the co. in a book containing a list of subscribers was not a holding out as partner.

The holding one's self out to the world as a partner, as contra-distinguished from the actual relation of partnership, imports at least the voluntary act of the party so holding himself out. It implies the lending of his name to the partnership; & is altogether incompatible with the want of knowledge that his name has been so used (TINDAL, C.J.).—FOX v. CLIFTON (1830), 6 Bing. 776; L. & Welsb. 300; 4 Moo. & P. 676; 8 L. SUB-SECT. 1.—WHAT PARTNERSHIPS ARE LEGAL.

207. Partnership in profits of public office.]—(1) Where a personal office or employment is purchased with the partnership funds for the benefit of the partnership, the partner in whose name it is purchased is not necessarily a trustee of the profits of the office for the other partners, after the term of partnership has expired. (2) Emoluments derived from an office held by one partner not to be considered partnership property, unless expressly mentioned in the partnership arts.—CLARKE v. RICHARDS (1835), 1 Y. & C. 218. General rule—Infant may be a partner.]—(1) An infant partner is not a debtor for goods supplied to his firm; judgment should therefore be entered either against the firm excepting the infant, or against the adult members alone.

(2) There is nothing to prevent an infant trading or becoming partner with a trader, & until his contract of partnership be disaffirmed he is a member of the trading firm. Though the infant cannot contract debts by such trading the adult partner is entitled to insist that the partnership assets shall be applied in payment of the liabilities of the partnership, & that until these are provided for, no part of them shall be received by the infant partner; &, if the proper steps are taken, this right of the adult partner can be made available for the benefit of the creditors.—LOVELL & CHRISTMAS v. BEAUCHAMP, [1894] A. SECT. 3.—EVIDENCE OF FORMATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

223. Draft articles—Followed by performance.]—A draft of arts. of partnership, together with a stated account, & the payment of money by the acting partner to the others, held to be sufficient evidence of the partnership, whereupon to ground a decree for an account.—WORTS v. PERN (1707), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 548; 1 E. R. 1490, H. L.

224. —— ——.]—(1) Where partners, who are so under contract for a fixed period, there being no specific power by the contract to dissolve, so conduct themselves that mutual confidence is impossible, the ct. will, of its own authority, dissolve the partnership against the will of one of the partners.

(2) The partnership had been carried on for some time. It was contended for pltf., firstly, that there were no written terms, & that it was a partnership at will. Deft. referred to a memorandum in writing prepared by pltf. & sent to deft. for approval, but never signed; & upon the terms therein expressed the partners had acted. One of the terms was that the partnership was to be for seven years. The ct. held that the partners had treated the memorandum as the basis of their partnership & were bound by it.—BAXTER v. WEST (1860), 1 Drew. & Sm. 173; 62 E. R. 344.

225. —— When no performance.]—E. experimented in sewage, B. in yeast, & W. supplied both of them with money for the purpose. The three traded ostensibly as partners under the various names of "S. & co.," "W. & co.," & "H. & co.," & ultimately under that of "H., B., E. & co." Prior to 1869, the terms of the ostensible partnership subsisted in parol only, the two businesses being speculative & hazardous; but in 1869, success in the yeast manufacture appearing to have been at last obtained, a draft deed of partnership was prepared, but before its execution a rupture occurred among the partners or intending partners, & the deed remained unexecuted. B. & W. expelled pltf. E. forcibly from the premises, & subsequently took out a patent for the yeast invention in their own names. E. filed his bill claiming to be restored to the partnership & to have the benefit of the patent, an injunction, & account. It was proved by the evidence that no yeast had ever been sold :—Held : these circumstances showed no partnership between pltf. E. & defts. W. & B.—ELLIS v. WARD (1872), 21 W. R. 100.

226. Agreement for partnership — When not acted on.]—Defts. agreed with pltf. to remunerate him "in the event of their taking into partnership" one M., introduced by pltf. Defts. afterwards entered into a written agreement with M., by which it was agreed that they should enter into partnership, as & from a specified future day, when a formal deed of partnership should be executed, carrying out the terms of the agreement. This agreement recognised & adopted the agreement between pltf. & defts. No partnership deed was ever executed, nor did M. ever in fact act as a partner of defts. :—Held : (1) the agreement between M. & defts. did not constitute a present partnership; (2) there was evidence of a "taking into partnership" within the meaning of the agreement between pltf. & defts., so as to entitle pltf. to his commission.—HARRIS v. PETHERICK (1878), 39 L. T. 543.

227. —— All terms not agreed.]—A. & B. agreed to take C. into partnership at a future date, the agreement required by both sides to be drawn up by solrs. The parties had not considered, & could not afterwards agree upon several terms of the intended partnership :—Held : there

The Act contained further provisions for the reimbursement, etc., of shareholders who might be sued "in any other manner than under the powers & authorities thereinbefore given": & sect. 31 enacted "that nothing therein contained should extend to incorporate the co., or to relieve or discharge the co., or any of the shareholders thereof, from any responsibility, duty, contract, or obligation whatever to which by law they then were or at any time thereafter might be subject or liable, either as between such co. & other parties, or as between the co. & any of the individual shareholders thereof & others, or as between themselves, or in any manner whatever:—Held: the fact of deft. having been party to a contract for the procuring the Act, of his name appearing in the Act as a subscriber to the undertaking, & of his having afterwards executed a deed of settlement which recited that the co. was in operation was evidence whence the jury might reasonably infer that he was a partner in the concern from the commencement.—BEECH v. EYRE (1843), 5 Man. & G. 415; 6 Scott, N. The parties intended that a more formal document should be prepared & signed by them respectively. Subsequently they came to England & acquired an English domicil, & the husband amassed a large fortune part of which he invested in real & leasehold property here. He died in the lifetime of the wife, having purported to dispose of all his property by an English will. It having been held that as to movables the wife was entitled notwithstanding the change of domicil to a one-half share under the law of community of goods, the question arose whether she was entitled on the same footing to a share of the real & leasehold property:—Held: on the authority of Forster v. Hale, No. 43, ante, & Dale v. Hamilton, No. 44, ante, Stat. Frauds did not apply, inasmuch as this was in substance a contract for a partnership, & the property required for the purposes of the partnership was by operation of law held for those purposes; therefore the real & leasehold property was subject to the community of goods.—Re DE NICOLS, DE NICOLS v. CURLIER, [1900] 2 Ch. 410; 69 L. SECT. 5.—VARIATION OF TERMS OF ARTICLES.

See Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 19.

248. By mode of dealing.]—(1) The manager of a partnership concern, having a salary, with a share of the profits, according to a proportion of capital & stock not advanced by him, but assigned by way of nominal interest, for the purpose of creating an addition to his salary, depending upon the contingency of the success which might be consequent upon his skill & industry, is not a partner subject to loss in account with the other partners. In such a case the manager is not liable for loss, although it is expressed in the arts. of partnership that the partners, not excepting the manager, are to be "subject to profit & loss," & although the manager signed the partnership books, joined in securities given by the partnership, & in most other partnership acts, including the advertisement for a dissolution; because it appeared, from the general structure, & all the provisions of the contract taken & construed together, as well as from the transactions between the parties & the conduct of the other partners, that the provision as to profit & loss was not intended to apply to the manager.

(2) A partner may be liable for loss as to the creditors of the partnership, & not so as to his co-partners.

(3) The most positive expressions as to liability to loss, in arts. of co-partnership, may be controlled & superseded by transactions between the parties, the conduct of the co-partners, & the special circumstances of the case, including non-claim, & inconsistent representations during a protracted litigation, which furnished occasion to make the claim if the right existed.

(4) The transactions between partners may amount to a waiver of a written agreement, or evidence of a new agreement, different from written articles, provided those transactions show a probability, amounting almost to demonstration, that the arts. were otherwise intended.—GEDDES v. WALLACE (1820), 2 Bli. 270; 4 E. 249. ——.]—(1) To entitle one partner to an order for an injunction & receiver, against his co-partner, he must either show a dissolution, or facts which, if proved at the hearing, would entitle him to a decree for a dissolution.

(2) Where a partner does acts inconsistent with the duty of a partner, & of a nature to destroy the mutual confidence which ought to subsist between partners, & makes it impossible that the business can be conducted in partnership with benefit to either party, the ct. will decree a dissolution before the expiration of the term for which the partnership was entered into.

(3) The transactions of partners with each other cannot be considered merely with reference to the express contract between them. The duties & obligations arising from the relation between the parties are regulated by the express contract between them, so far as the express contract extends & continues in force; but if the express contract, or so much of it as continues in force, does not reach to all those duties & obligations, they are implied & enforced by the law; & it is often matter to be collected & inferred from the conduct & practice of the parties, whether they have held themselves, or ought or ought not to be held, bound by the particular provisions contained in their express agreement. When it is insisted that the conduct of one partner entitles the other to a dissolution, the ct. must consider, not merely the specific terms of the express contract, but also the duties & obligations which are implied in every partnership contract.—SMITH v. JEYES (1841), 4 Beav. 503; 49 E. R. 433.

254. —— Whether single instance of waiver sufficient.]—(1) Although arts. of partnership may be presumed from the dealings of the partners to have been waived, a single instance of departure from them is not a sufficient foundation for such a presumption.

Where arts. of partnership between London solrs. provided that either partner might retire, & that in that case the continuing partners should pay the retiring partner for his share & goodwill the fair marketable value, & the retiring partner should not practise within one hundred miles of the General Post Office, but should use his best endeavours to promote the interests of the remaining partners :—Held : goodwill must be taken to mean only the interest which the retiring partner would have had if he had remained in the partnership till the expiration of it by effluxion of time.—AUSTEN v. BOYS (1858), 2 De G. & J. 626 ; 27 L. 255. —— —— Extension of objects of partnership.]—Partnership is frequently said to be a branch of the law of agency, but it might also be correctly described as a branch of the law of contract when, besides what is expressly provided for by the partnership deed, something aliunde was introduced by agreement, that is just as much a part of the partnership, as if it had been provided for by the original deed. In order to ascertain whether the scope of the partnership has been enlarged, one generally looks at the conduct of the partners in relation to the business, extending over a number of years ; though, on the other hand, some one act of great importance might be sufficient to enable the ct. to draw a conclusion that the objects of the business have been extended (KEKEWICH, J.).—PEAT v. SMITH (1889), 5 T. By a subsequent parol agreement it was arranged that the accounts should be settled once a year only, viz., at Michaelmas :—Held : this variation in the partnership arts. did not affect the money interests of the partners, & upon the death of a partner in the month of May the accounts must be settled up to the previous Mar. 25.—LAWES v. LAWES (1878), 9 Ch. In a partnership between A., B. & C., there was a stipulation that if one died, the survivor should take the business & pay his exors. his capital as appearing on the last account. A. died, & B. & C. continued to carry on the business without arts. B. afterwards died. The ct., from the conduct of the parties, inferred that B. & C. carried on their business on the same terms, as to winding up on the death of either, as those which applied to the first partnership between A., B. & C., & decreed C. to pay to B.'s exors. his capital as appearing on the last account.—KING v. CHUCK (1853), 17 Beav. 325 ; 51 E. A. & B. entered into partnership for a term. The arts. provided that, in case either partner should die before the expiration of the partnership term, the surviving partner should settle & adjust all accounts, matters, & things relating to the partnership, & should become the purchaser of the share of the deceased partner, at the amount fixed as the value thereof, on the last annual statement of account, & should pay the same by certain instalments. On the expiration of the term, A. & B. continued to carry on the business without any reference to the partnership arts. A. died. B. then expressed his determination to carry on the business alone, &, under an arrangement with A.'s administratrix, stated an account of the value of the business as a going concern at the death of A., & took over the business & A.'s share, at the amount appearing by the account to be the value thereof, & paid sums on account. On the death of B. the partnership assets were sold at a considerable loss, & it was insisted by B.'s representatives that this loss ought to be borne ratably by A.'s & B.'s estates:—Held: as B. had insisted on his right under the arts. to purchase A.'s share at a valuation stated by himself, A.'s administratrix was entitled to prove against B.'s estate for the balance due under the stated account.—HOGG v. HOGG (1876), 35 L. At A.'s death his capital was more than three times as large as that of B., & B., who claimed under the expired arts. the right to purchase the business, continued, without the consent of A.'s representatives, to carry it on & to use A.'s capital therein. In 1873, A.'s representatives commenced this suit against B., &, at the hearing in 1875, it was decided that B.'s option to purchase ceased when the arts. expired. The business was then sold under the order of the ct., after having been thus carried on for about three years:—Held: after making a proper allowance to B. for managing the business, the profits earned since A.'s death must be divided between A.'s representatives & B., according to the proportion in which the partners were entitled to the capital employed in the business.—YATES v. FINN (1880), 13 Ch. After the expiration of the term created by the arts. of partnership, A. & B. continued to carry on the business without making any fresh arrangement:—Held: the provisions of the clause in the original arts. giving B. the option of purchasing A.'s share remained in force, & were applicable to the partnership at will carried on by them after the expiration of the original term.—DAW v. HERRING, [1892] 1 Ch. 284; 61 L. By clause 25 pltf. was to be at liberty to determine the partnership by giving deft. six months' notice, & whether so determined or by effluxion of time she should have the right to purchase the share of deft. at a valuation. Since Jan. 1, 1899, the partnership had been carried on on the like terms, as a partnership at will. At the hearing deft. contended that the continued partnership was not a partnership at will, & that in any event clause 25 was now applicable:—Held: (1) such continued partnership was a partnership at will, under Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 27, & (2) having regard to the observations of LORD WATSON in Neilson v. Mossend Iron Co., No. 288, post, & the judgment of STIRLING, L.J., in Daw v. Herring, No. 285, ante, clause 25 was not inconsistent with a partnership at will, & accordingly pltf. was entitled to the declaration as asked.—BROOKS v. BROOKS (1901), 85 L. 288. ——.]—When the members of a mercantile firm continue to trade as partners after the expiration of the term limited by the partnership arts., without making any new agreement, the original contract is prolonged by tacit consent, & all its conditions remain in force, except in so far as they are inconsistent with any implied term of the renewed contract. An implied term of such a new contract is that each partner has the right, when acting bonâ fide & not for the purpose of obtaining an undue advantage, instantly to determine the partnership.

(2) A clause of a contract of co-partnership provided, inter alia, that "If three months before the termination of this contract, the whole partners of the co. shall not have agreed to carry on the business thereof, any one or more of them who may be desirous of retiring shall be entitled to do so, & shall immediately, on the completion of the balance after-mentioned, be paid out, by the partners electing to continue the business, his share in the concern, as the same shall be ascertained by a balance of the co.'s books, as at the termination of the contract to be completed, within not more than three months from said termination; . . . but if the whole partners wish, the property & assets of the copartnery shall be disposed of as follows: It shall be competent for any one of the partners, for himself, or for any one or more of them together, to give in offers for the same as a going concern, & the highest offerer is to be held to be the purchaser; & in case only one offer was made, the party making it was to be the purchaser, at such a price as should be mutually agreed, & in case no offer was made, then the said property & assets should be realised in such manner as should be mutually agreed upon, or as should be fixed by the arbiter named." The business was carried on after the term limited by the contract of copartnery had expired without any new agreement:—Held: this clause had no longer any application; & that each partner was at liberty to determine the whole partnership whenever he thought proper.—NEILSON v. MOSSEND IRON CO. The arts. contained an arbn. clause, providing, in effect, that all disputes or questions respecting the partnership affairs, or the construction of the arts., should be referred to arbn. There were also clauses providing for the purchasing by the continuing partners of the share of a deceased partner. An action was brought by the exors. of a deceased partner against the surviving partner for the winding up of the partnership. Deft. moved for a stay of proceedings & a reference of the matters in difference between the parties to arbn. One of the questions was, whether it was for the ct. or for the arbitrators to determine which of the clauses in the arts., & in particular whether the purchasing clauses, applied to the partnership so carried on after the expiration of the term:—Held: it was for the arbitrators, & not for the ct., to determine which of the arts. applied; & a stay of proceedings must be directed, & a reference of all matters in difference to arbn.—COPE v. COPE (1885), 52 L. Part IV.—Relations between Partners and Third Parties.

SECT. 1.—LIABILITY OF FIRM FOR ACTS OF PARTNER.

SUB-SECT. 1.—GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

A. In General.

See Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 5.

295. General rule — Acts or words of one bind the other.]—What one member of a dissolved partnership admits, touching a partnership account with pltf., is an admission as against the firm, & supports a count for an account stated against all its members.

When two parties are partners, whatever the one does binds the other. They may sever as to the future, but they remain partners for ever as to the past transactions of the firm. An admission or a promise by one partner as to the past, is an admission or promise by both. Whatever one partner says after a dissolution is as much evidence against the firm as it would have been before the dissolution (POLLOCK, C.B.).—BROWN v. MACALLUM & WORLEY (1848), 10 L. T. O. S. 482.

296. —— ——.]—We are told that a joint stock co., at least if not incorporated, & only empowered by a public Act of Parliament as this is, to sue & be sued by its officers, is in the same situation as any mercantile partnership consisting of two or three individuals carrying on business jointly under an ordinary deed of partnership or by a parol agreement among themselves of which the world is ignorant, in which case what is said or done by any one partner respecting the partnership business affects all the partners, although in violation of their agreement inter se. But why is this so? Because, carrying on business jointly under a common form, they hold out to the world that each of them has authority to manage the partnership concerns. Therefore all are bound by what each does in conducting the partnership business. All the members of the firm are liable to the bonâ fide holder of a bill of exchange, drawn, accepted, or indorsed by any one of them. But supposing that A., B., & C., entering into partnership, it is expressly stipulated that A. shall not draw, accept, or indorse bills in the partnership firm, & this stipulation is known to X., he would have no remedy against B. & C. on a bill of exchange which he induced A. to draw, accept, or indorse. Therefore on the principle which regulates the liability of common parties, a distinction must be made between a member of a common mercantile partnership & a shareholder in a joint stock co. (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.). —BURNES v. PENNELL (1849), 2 H. L. Cas. 497; 14 L. T. O. S. 245; 9 E. R. 1181; sub nom. BURNES v. PENNELL, FORTH MARINE INSURANCE CASE, 13 Jur. 897, H. L.

297. Partner general agent of firm.]—A partner in an undertaking is, by virtue of that relation, constituted a general agent for his co-partners in all matters relating to the partnership; & he has all the authorities necessary for carrying on the undertaking, & all such as are usually exercised by the partnership.

Any restriction imposed by agreement among the partners on the authority possessed by them, though operative as between the partners themselves, does not limit their authority as to third persons who acquire rights under its exercise, unless such persons knew of the restriction imposed.

Necessary goods were furnished, according to the usual course in such concerns, to the order of an agent of directors, appointed to carry on a mine, for the benefit of shareholders:—Held: (1) a shareholder who had paid sums of money towards & interfered in working the mine, was a complete partner with the directors, & liable for the goods supplied. (2) an agreement made by him with the directors, that they should not deal on credit, of which the party who supplied the goods knew nothing, did not exempt him from such liability.—HAWKEN v. BOURNE (1841), 8 M. & W. 703; 151 E. 298. ——.]—The general power of partners in ordinary trading partnerships & the restrictions upon such powers appear to us to be stated with great accuracy by Mr. Justice Story in his Treatises on Partnership & on Agency & we willingly adopt his language. In the latter of these works, Chap. VI., sects. 124 & 125, the law is thus stated: s. 124. "Every partner is, in contemplation of law, the general & accredited agent of the partnership; or, as it is sometimes expressed, each partner is præpositus negotiis societatis; & may, consequently, bind all the other partners by his acts, in all matters which are within the scope & objects of the partnership. Hence, if the partnership be of a general commercial nature, he may pledge or sell the partnership property; he may buy goods on account of the partnership; he may borrow money, contract debts, & pay debts on account of the partnership; he may draw, make, sign, indorse, accept, transfer, negotiate, & procure to be discounted, promissory notes, bills of exchange, cheques, & other negotiable paper, in the name & on account of the partnership." S. 125. "The restrictions of this implied authority of partners to bind the partnership are apparent from what has been already stated. Each partner is an agent only in & for the business of the firm; &, therefore, his acts beyond that business will not bind the firm. Neither will his acts done in violation of his duty to the firm, bind it, when the other party to the transaction is cognisant of, or co-operates in such breach of duty." That, in ordinary trading partnerships,

337. Opening account—In individual name.]—The name in which the contract is made is primâ facie evidence of the party for whom the contract was made; but it is not conclusive, except by the custom of trade in the case of bills of exchange. Therefore where two pltfs. sue on a contract between them & defts. as bankers, & it appears at the trial that the bank account was opened in the name of one only of pltfs., it is competent for pltfs. to prove that the account was opened on behalf of them both; & it is sufficient to maintain the action if it is proved that pltf. who actually opened the account at the time intended it to be the account of the two, without showing that defts. had before the action any notice that he had so intended. It lies on pltf. to prove this intention affirmatively; & the fact that pltfs. were partners, & that the money paid into the account belonged to the partnership, is not alone sufficient evidence to go to the jury that the contract was intended to be made on behalf of the two.—COOKE v. SEELEY (1848), 2 Exch. 746; 17 L. 344. Appropriation of payments in.]—The acting member of a firm has implied authority to assent to the transfer of their account from one banker to another, without the express assent of the others; though Qu.: whether the acting partner would have implied authority to borrow money from the party to whom he transferred the account, in order to pay off the original creditor.

Upon such a transfer, however, the actual amount due is alone transferred, & the banker to whom the account is transferred has no other rights than the party from whom it is transferred. In an action by them against the partner, whose express assent to the transfer was not obtained, to recover the alleged balance of the account transferred, the question would be, what was the real & true balance of account as between the original parties, debtor & creditor? & the partner sued is entitled to raise any question as to the amount due from the firm which he might have raised in an action at the suit of the original creditor. But where the balance due from the firm at the time of their transfer of their account has been over-topped by subsequent payments to their credit, as to which there has been nothing to take the case out of the ordinary principle of appropriation of payments to the earlier items, the cause of action is not the balance of account existing at the time of transfer, which has thus been extinguished, but the balance subsequently becoming due.—BEALE v. CADDICK (1857), 2 H. & N. 326; 26 L. 345 i. Whether firm liable.]—Where a partner made a promissory note in the name of his firm, & gave it to his creditor for his own separate debt:—Held: the fact that such partner had, during a period of six months previously, so used cheques of the firm which were duly honoured, gave the creditor reasonable ground for believing that such partner had the authority of the firm to make, & so to use, such promissory note; & he might recover the amount from the firm.—LONDON CHARTERED BANK OF AUSTRALIA v. KERR (1878), 4 V. 345 iv. ——.]—When a co. is formed for purposes which do not render the drawing & accepting of bills & notes necessary, it will be sufficient to establish the liability of a partner on bills or notes drawn or accepted in the name of the co. by their secretary that while he was a partner the secretary was in the habit of so drawing & accepting bills, which were afterwards paid with his concurrence & admission of liability.—LEE v. MCDONALD (1841), 6 O. 347. ——.]—A partner has, generally, full authority to deal with the partnership property for partnership purposes, & if the business be such as ordinarily requires bills of exchange, he can, unless restrained by agreement, draw, indorse & accept bills in his own name for partnership purposes. But if a person dealing with the individual partner has reason to think that what is done in the partnership name is done for private purposes, he is put upon inquiry to ascertain the extent of the partner's authority; otherwise he must depend on the right of the partner, or rely on circumstances sufficient to repel the presumption of fraud. So that, where a partner drew bills in the name of a partnership firm, & obtained acceptances to them from various persons by fraudulent misrepresentation of what it was that was being signed, & then indorsed the bills, so accepted, with the name of the firm, & again indorsed them over to himself :—Held : the partner's private bankers, who discounted the bills, having full notice that their customer was using partnership property for his private purposes, & seeing that all the signatures, except the acceptances, were in his handwriting, were guilty of gross negligence, & could not be allowed to prove in bkpcy. for the loss they had sustained on the fraudulent acceptances against the estate of the surviving partners.—Re RICHES & MARSHALL'S TRUST DEED, Ex p. DARLINGTON DISTRICT JOINT STOCK BANKING CO. Authority rebuttable by express notice.]—The authority of one partner to bind another by signing bills of exchange & promissory notes in their joint names is only an implied authority, & may be rebutted by express previous notice to the party taking such security from one of them, that the other would not be liable for it. This, though it were represented to the holder by the partner signing such security, that the money advanced on it was raised for the purpose of being applied to the payment of partnership debts; & though the greater part of it were in fact so applied. (b) Trading Partnerships.

359. General rule—Authority confined to trading partnerships.]—The implied authority of one partner to bind another by promissory note or bill of exchange is confined to partnerships for the purpose of trade. One of two attorneys in partnership has no implied authority to bind his partner by a note in the name of the firm, though given for their debt. As, for money handed to the firm by a client to be laid out on mtge. Declaration on a promissory note, with a count on an account stated: particular of demand, specifying that the action is brought to recover £555 due on the note set forth in the first count, with interest from, etc., to the day of payment; & that pltf., for recovery thereof, will avail herself of the whole or any part of the declaration :—Held : the note, being invalid, was not, by this particular, made admissible evidence of the account stated.—HEDLEY v. BAINBRIDGE (1842), 3 Q. One of them travelled for orders, &, having incurred expenses, drew a bill, for the first time, in the partnership name, to raise funds to execute an order. The other partner accepted it, but before it was issued, countermanded the authority to negotiate it, & it was negotiated without his knowledge:—Held: the mere partnership did not render him liable upon it.—YATES v. DALTON (1858), 28 L. J. Ex. 69.

369. —— Farming partnership.]—A joint interest in a farm, is not a partnership, & therefore, will not convey an implied authority to one of two persons, to bind the other by the acceptance of bills of exchange for payments in respect of the farm. Therefore, it is incumbent upon the holder of bills accepted by one party so jointly interested, in the name of both, who seeks to recover against the other, to prove express authority has been given to make such acceptance. Thus, where A. agreed to take a farm, in which B. was to be jointly interested, & stipulated to pay for the stock & crop thereof, in good bills at three months, & B. afterwards, without the knowledge of A. made a new arrangement, relative to such payment, in pursuance of which he accepted bills in the name of himself & A., payable at twelve months, which acceptances were not subsequently ratified by A., it was held, that the holder of the bills was not entitled to recover against A.—GREENSLADE v. DOWER (1828), 7 B. & C. 635; 1 Man. & Ry. 371. General rule—Authority incident to trading partnership.]—BANK OF AUSTRALASIA v. BREILLAT, No. 298, ante.

372. —— ——.]—It is an incident of a common trading partnership & the managing partners have authority to borrow money for partnership purposes, which include the payment of partnership debts incurred in the ordinary course of business; & this authority is not excluded by special provisions in the partnership deed as to the raising of additional capital, or supplying deficiencies in the funds by contributions of the partners. Therefore, where in such a case the attorney of the managing partners paid partnership debts at their request, & on their promise to give a bill in the name of the firm, & the partnership deed contained a clause, that if any of the partners should for any other purpose than the immediate use of the partnership draw or accept any bill of exchange in the name of the firm, the others might dissolve the partnership:—Held: the other partners were liable, either on the bill or for money paid to their use.—BROWN v. KIDGER (1858), 3 H. & N. 853; 28 L. PART IV. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 2.—F.

371 i. General rule—Authority incident to trading partnership.]—The three defts. were in partnership in a business which had two branches. Deft. E., who was in charge of one breach, borrowed money from pltf. for the purposes of the business, & gave pltf. a promissory note therefor, signed by E. in the firm name. The money actually went into the business:—Held: E. had authority to borrow for the purposes of the firm & to give a promissory note so as to bind the then members of the firm. The partnership, having received & used the money, would be liable as for money had & received.—THOMAS v. MCNAUGHTON (Man.) (1912), 21 W. L. R. 267; 2 W. W. R. 381; 2 D. L. R. 211.—CAN.

b. For partnership purposes — No authority to borrow.]—The mere fact that money borrowed by a member of the firm has been applied to partnership purposes, is not sufficient of itself to render the firm liable, at law, to repay it when there is no actual or implied authority to borrow, & there has been no ratification of the loan.—ROBERTSON v. JONES (1880), 20 N. 376. —— Increase of partnership capital.]—The implied authority of a partner to bind his co-partners for the repayment of money borrowed for partnership purposes, in the ordinary course of partnership transactions, does not necessarily extend to raising money for the purpose of increasing the fixed capital of the firm; & therefore a party advancing money to one partner, knowing that it was for the latter purpose, cannot as a matter of course charge the other partners with the loan, unless the transaction took place with their express or actual authority.

Two partners in a firm announced their intention of adding £16,000 to their capital, by admitting one or more additional partners. W. entered into a negotiation with one of the partners, then acting on behalf of both, on the subject of the announcement, but afterwards declining to enter into the firm, advanced a sum of £4,000 to that partner by way of loan, on the security of the bills of the firm, & also of the separate estate of such partner:—Held: W. had, so far as this evidence went, notice that the loan of £4,000 was an advance, not within the implied authority of the partner obtaining it, the other partner having authorised the capital to be raised in a different mode; but, inasmuch as the original partnership was then existing, & the advance might have been within the scope of the partnership authority, without reference to the proposed increase of capital, liberty was given to W. for the purpose of trying that question, to bring an action on the bills against the exors. of the other partner.—FISHER v. TAYLER (1843), 2 Hare, 218; 67 E. 377. —— On personal credit of co-partner.]—L., K. & W., entered into an agreement to engage in a speculation in land, & agreed to be liable, pro rata, according to the value of their shares, for the cost of any land acquired for the purposes of the adventure.

K., who took the active management, borrowed money for the purposes of the adventure, & granted a mtge. bond on the lands of the adventurers, which contained a clause making him personally liable for the debt. At the time of effecting the loan he produced the agreement, & the money was advanced in consideration of its existence:—Held: in the absence of any evidence that L. or W. had authorised K. to pledge their personal credit, they were not liable for the debt.—BLAINE v. HOLLAND (1889), 60 L. 378. Misapplication of money borrowed—Appropriation to private purpose.]—Advances made to one partner with the full assent & authority of the others, although the amount may be misapplied by him, is a receipt on behalf of the co-partnership, & a debt is constituted against such co-partnership.—JACKSON v. OGG (1859), John. 397; 34 L. For the purposes of the joint account, defts. entrusted H. with bearer securities to the amount of £20,000 for the purpose of being deposited by him as margin in respect of a loan to be borrowed from a specified lender. H. did not borrow from that lender, & he had the £20,000 margins in his possession on Sept. 15, 1911, on which day H. became indebted to pltfs. On subsequently discovering the existence of the joint account transactions between H. & defts. pltfs. sued defts. in debt on the ground that they were partners with H.:—Held: the claim failed, inasmuch as H. had no authority to act for the joint adventure by borrowing from any one except the specified lender, & pltfs. did not at the material date know or believe H. to be a partner with defts.—LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. SWISS BANKVEREIN, UNION OF LONDON & SMITHS BANK, LTD. v. SWISS BANKVEREIN (1912), 107 L. G. Contracts.

387. General rule — Liability not confined to contracts relating to partnership trade.]—Pltf. was employed as an attorney by the owner of a mill to take the necessary steps for paying off a mtge. thereon. The owner carried on the business of a miller at the mill, in partnership with several other persons, all of whom knew of the mtge., & had ordered their clerk to pay the interest:—Held: the partners were liable to the attorney for his bill of costs.

It is quite a fallacy to suppose that partners are not liable except upon contracts relating to the article in which they deal. They must have a place wherein to carry on their business; & if partners take a shop for that purpose, though one only should act, yet both are liable for the use of it. Here one of the partners is owner, subject to a mtge.; the partners are his lessees; & the manager or clerk acts for all. Under these circumstances, therefore, I think that defts. are liable to the attorney (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—GRIFFITH v. HUGHES (1847), 9 L. T. O. S. 147.

388. Contract for sale.] — The sale of one partner is the sale of them both; & therefore although that one of them selleth the goods, or merchandizeth with them, yet the action must be brought in both their names; & in such case deft. shall not be received to wage his law, that the other partner did not sell the goods unto him, as is supposed in the declaration (per CUR.). -LAMBERTS CASE (1614), Godb. 244; 78 E. R. 142.

389. —— On behalf of firm—Execution by two partners only—Question for jury.]—In assumpsit on a contract for the delivery of coals from a colliery, it appeared that the agreement, for supplying such coals & for the demise of a real wharf purported to be made between pltf. & the partners in the colliery, three in number, & was executed by pltf. & two of the partners:—Held: admitting such contract to be one by which partners might bind an absent co-partner or themselves, yet the judge, on trial, ought not to decide, as matter of law, that the contract signed by two bound them, but should desire the jury to say whether it was intended to do so or not, if there are circumstances from which an intention can be inferred that no party should be bound unless all the partners signed.—LATCH v. WEDLAKE (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 959; 3 Per. & Dav. 499; 9 L. 390. —— —— Approval by one partner only.]—B. was the chief partner in a partnership of three persons. The word "approved" written by him & signed with his name was treated as an assent binding on all the partners whose names were mentioned in the paper, although the usual form of signature of the partnership was that of "B. & Sons."

A mere mental assent to the terms stated in a proposed contract would not be binding, but acting upon those terms, by sending coals in the quantities & at the prices mentioned in it, amounted to sufficient to show the adoption of the writing previously altered & sent, & to constitute it a valid contract.—BROGDEN v. METROPOLITAN RY. One partner member of two partnerships.]—A manufacturer, A. proposed to a firm of B. & C., who were the home agents of A.'s foreign consignees, that they should make advances to him against the consignments, & that "the proceeds of sales, above the advances," should go to the liquidation of an old claim of B. & C. against A. B. & C. assented to this arrangement by a letter which, after stating that there were two ways of making advances : one for A. to draw on B. & C., & take their acceptances, & negotiate them ; the other for B. & C. to advance cash to A., & draw on A., for the amounts, A. to accept, B. & C. to negotiate, concluded thus : & we shall retire that acceptance from proceeds of the sales. In pursuance of this arrangement A. directed his consignees to remit to B. & C. & B. & C. made advances to A. by drawing on him, negotiating his acceptances, & remitting the proceeds to him. Afterwards B. & C. being in want of money, directed the consignees to remit, not to themselves, but to a firm of bankers C. & D., having a common partner with themselves, as a security for advances made by C. & D. to B. & C. Upon B. & C. becoming bkpt. :—Held : C. & D. had notice of the arrangement between A. & B. & C., through the fact of the common partner ; & that upon the construction of the contract, the remittances in the hands of C. & D. were appropriated in equity, first to the payment of A.'s acceptances, &, subject thereto, to the discharge of the old claim.—STEELE v. STUART (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 84 ; 14 L. T. 620.

442. —— Notice to clerk or agent.]—The doctrine of constructive notice, as applied to a partnership firm, no doubt makes the clerk or agent of the firm a person whose knowledge will affect the firm as a firm with constructive notice, and in that sense will make every partner liable for the consequences of the constructive notice as a member of the firm, but no one has ever carried that doctrine to this extent, that the knowledge of the agent of the firm shall be the knowledge of the individual partner as between himself and his co-partner ; in fact, all the cases in equity with which I am familiar have proceeded on the opposite doctrine (JESSEL, M.R.).—LACEY v. HILL, LENEY v. HILL (1876), 4 Ch. 443. Presumption as to knowledge of co-partner's acts — When duty to obtain.] — (1) Partners will be deemed, for the protection of those who deal with them, to have such knowledge of the acts of their co-partners, as in the discharge of their plain duty they might & ought to have obtained.

(2) Difficulty in holding a partner who ostensibly takes an active part in the conduct of the business free from responsibility, on the ground of insanity, in respect of the acts of the firm.

(3) Confirmed & incurable insanity is a ground for dissolving a partnership ; but I apprehend, before a decree is made that a partnership shall be dissolved on this ground, it must be shown not only that the party alleged to be insane is not for the time so capable as he had previously been of attending to & conducting the business, but it must be shown clearly & distinctly that he is really insane (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—SADLER v. LEE (1843), 6 Beav. 324 ; 12 L. 444. What constitutes notice—Not knowledge of fraud.]—I put the case of a clerk knowing it before he became a partner, & not interfering with it afterwards. But it is immaterial that the knowledge was acquired during the partnership. Suppose, either from corruption, that is, from receiving presents or otherwise, or affection, the goods being supplied by a relative, one of the partners knows that the vendor is defrauding the firm. I am satisfied that, according to sound doctrine, that knowledge would not prevent the remaining partners from suing the parties to the fraud, & recovering in a ct. of equity. It appears to me that that kind of notice will not do when it is applied to cases of fraud (JESSEL, M.R.).—WILLIAMSON v. BARBOUR (1877), 9 Ch. D. 529 ; 50 L. J. Ch. 147 ; 37 L. T. 698 ; 27 W. O. Powers of Attorney.

449. Grant to firm—Transaction by one partner—Sole liability of partner acting.]—A power of attorney for the transfer of a sum of Consols standing in the books of the Bank of England in the names of two persons was applied for by a firm of stockbrokers consisting of three partners. By the power of attorney the stock holders purported to appoint two of the partners jointly & severally to act for them in the matter of the transfer. One of the partners alone acted under the power of attorney and signed the transfer in the books of the Bank. The signature of one of the stock holders to the power of attorney was forged, but this was unknown to the stockbrokers & to the bank. In an action by the stock holder whose signature was forged against the Bank to replace the stock so transferred the Bank served a third party notice on the three stockbrokers, claiming an indemnity from them:—Held: the Bank were liable to replace the stock; the stockbroker who had acted upon the power of attorney & signed the transfer was liable, under an implied warranty of authority as agent, to indemnify the Bank against the loss caused to them by the breach of that warranty, even though the stockbroker had acted in the honest belief that he had the authority; & the other two partners were not liable.—OLIVER v. BANK OF ENGLAND, STARKEY, LEVESON & COOKE, THIRD PARTIES, [1901] 1 Ch. 652; 70 L. (2) Semble: a verdict recovered by one pltf. suing without his partner would be an answer to a subsequent action by the firm, for the same cause of action.

466. —— —— ——.]—Pltf. & W. were partners, & during the partnership had dealings with defts. W. was indebted to them on his own account, & at his request they applied £1,000 of the partnership money, paid by him to them, to the liquidation of his private debt. Pltf. did not know of or authorise this mode of applying the money, & had not conducted himself in such a manner as to make it reasonable for defts. to believe that he had authorised it, but they did in fact believe he had. Upon the dissolution of the partnership, it appeared from the accounts that the firm owed defts. more than £5,000, & pltf. accepted bills for the whole balance apparently due. These bills were handed to defts. for the purpose of being discounted. Before they arrived at maturity, pltf. discovered the application by defts. of the £1,000 to W.'s private debt. He nevertheless met the bills, at the same time informing defts. that he did so under protest, & only to save his father's credit, whose name was on the bills as drawer. In an action to recover the £1,000, as money paid under a mistake of fact :—Held : defts. could not retain the money as against W.'s private debt, pltf. never having authorised its appropriation to that debt, nor conducted himself so as to give them reasonable grounds for believing that he had.—KENDAL v. WOOD (1870), L. 474. —— Partner acting as administrator.]—A., being a partner in a mercantile house in India, was entitled to the interest of a sum of money, which was limited to his sons on his dying within a given period. The firm in India, at A.'s death within that period, was greatly indebted to their agents in England, of which firm B., the administrator, was a partner. After A.'s death, notice was given to the firm in England, of there being male issue of A., but not stating their names. B. subsequently received the dividends, & credited the Indian firm with the amount in the books of the English firm:—Held: the partners of the English firm were liable to repay such dividends, with interest at 5 per cent.—AGABEG v. HARTWELL (1835), 4 L. 475. —— Bonds in custody of firm.]—A trustee, one of a firm of stockbrokers, misapplied the trust securities. His partners were, under the circumstances, made responsible.

A., who was in partnership with B., C., & D. as stockbrokers, was one of the trustees of pltf.'s marriage settlement. Some Portuguese bonds belonging to her, which were in A.'s custody, were included in the settlement. After the marriage, the firm bought some Brazilian bonds on account of the trust. The ct., from the course of dealing, considered the bonds to be in the custody of the firm, & A., the trustee, having applied them to his own use:—Held: his co-partners were, as custodians, liable to replace them.—DE RIBEYRE (MARQUISE) v. BARCLAY (1857), 23 Beav. 107; 26 L. 476. Effect of judgment against defaulting partner.]—Funds, subject to the trusts of a settlement, were invested in Exchequer bills, on the sale of which the proceeds were paid to the account of a firm of solrs.—F., S., & F. at their bankers. The funds were afterwards advanced on a mtge. of house property in a new neighbourhood, & of inadequate value. At that date there were no trustees of the settlement, & the mtge. was taken in the names of S. & two other persons who were then proposed, & shortly afterwards appointed new trustees, & never repudiated the transaction. S. was the member of his firm who acted for them in all the matters, & for the work which he did the firm, by arrangement, received, at the time when the money was advanced, payment for their bill of costs out of the funds. The mtge. proved to be an insufficient security, & in an action against the trustees it was held that they were jointly & severally liable to make good the loss sustained. The property not having been sold, or the trust funds replaced, beneficiaries sought to make the

478. Fraud unknown to co-partner—Fictitious purchase & sale on commission.]—A. employed B. & C., who were partners as wine & spirit merchants, to purchase wine & sell the same upon commission. C., the managing partner, represented that he had made the purchases, & that he had sold a part of the wines so purchased at a profit ; the proceeds of such supposed sales he paid to A., & rendered accounts, in which he stated the purchases to have been made at a certain rate per pipe. In fact, C. had neither bought nor sold any wine. The transactions were wholly fictitious, but B. was wholly ignorant of that. Upon the whole account a larger sum had been repaid to A., as the proceeds of that part of the wine alleged to be resold, than he had advanced ; but the other part of the wine, which C. represented as having been purchased, was unaccounted for :—Held : B. was liable for the false representations of his partner ; & A. was entitled to retain the money that had been paid to him upon these fictitious transactions, as if they were real.—RAPP v. LATHAM (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 795 ; 106 E. 480. —— Misappropriation of money—Effect of order of discharge.]—One of two partners in a firm of solrs. misappropriated money entrusted to the firm for investment, & then absconded. The firm subsequently went into liquidation, & the other partner, who was not a party to the misappropriation, received his order of discharge. In an action against the innocent partner to recover the amount of the money misappropriated : —Held : deft. was not protected by the order of discharge, for that the partnership was liable for the fraud committed, & 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 49, does not limit the liability of a partner for partnership debts to those incurred by means of his own personal fraud or breach of trust.—COOPER v. PRICHARD (1883), 11 Q. 481. —— Sale of partnership property — Whether bar to action by firm.]—In assumpsit by A., B., & C. against D., upon a money demand, D. pleaded that pltfs. carried on business in partnership ; that pltf. A., with the privity & concurrence of the pltfs. B. & C., requested D. to sell certain property belonging to A., B., & C. as co-partners, which D. thereupon agreed to do ; that, at the time A. requested D. to sell, & also at the time of the sale, & of the making the loans & advances by D. to A. thereinafter mentioned, D. believed A. to be the sole owner of the property, & that he had full authority to dispose of it for his sole use & benefit, D. having no knowledge that B. & C. had any interest in it ; that, after D. had been so retained & employed to sell the property, & before it was sold, & before he had any notice or knowledge that A. was not solely possessed of & interested in the property, D., at the request of A., lent divers sums of money to A. ; that, before D. lent the said money to A., it was agreed between them that D. should retain, deduct, & reimburse himself the full amount out of the proceeds of the property ; that D. was induced to lend & did lend the said money to A. upon the faith & in consideration of such agreement ; & that D. did sell & dispose of the said property for A., other pltfs. suffering & permitting A. to deal therewith as his own sole property, without objection or interference ; & the plea then justified retaining the money to reimburse D. for such advances under the said agreement.

To this plea pltfs. replied that B. & C. did not suffer or permit A. to deal with the said property as his own sole property.

A verdict having been found for pltfs. :—Held : enough of the plea remained unanswered to constitute a sufficient bar to pltfs.' right to recover ; the replication traversed an immaterial allegation ; but the proper course was not to arrest the judgment, but to award a repleader.

The rule that a repleader is never awarded in favour of the party who made the first fault, applies only where the issue is found against that party.—GORDON v. ELLIS (1844), 7 Man. & G. 607 ; 2 Dow. & L. 308 ; 8 Scott, N. If he elect to abide by his contract with B., C. is not liable for a fraud committed by B. against A. in respect of the contract, though B. was acting within the scope of the partnership business.

Pltfs. appointed B. their solr., & instructed him to act for them in a mtge. transaction. While the business was pending, B. took deft. into partnership, & gave pltfs. notice in writing. Pltfs. paid no attention to the notice, continued to correspond with B. in his own name, & finally sent him the money to advance on the mtge. by cheque made payable to his order, & accepted his receipt in his own name. B. paid the money into his own account & misappropriated it :—Held : pltfs. had elected to continue to employ B. alone, & deft. was not liable for B.'s fraud.

Transaction not within duties of partnership.]—One of a firm of solrs. received a sum of money to be applied in compounding with a client's creditors, & a receipt was given in the name of the firm. The partner who received the money absconded with it :—Held : the other member of the firm could not demur to a bill by the client for want of equity, on the ground that the receipt of the money for such purposes was not within the scope of the partnership business; but he could demur for want of parties, as the absconding partner was not made a party to the suit.—ATKINSON v. MACKRETH (1866), L. Trespass — Nature of taking available to partnership — Question for jury.] — Defts. were partners in business as brewers ; & one of them, in the name of the others, wrongfully ejected the tenant of a canteen, who held under a lease from the Board of Ordnance, they, defts., being sureties for the payment of his rent & for his quiet tenantship. It was ruled that one partner has no right to involve another, unless in the ordinary course of their business, not, for instance, in a trespass, as above stated.

The exception to this doctrine is in the case where the trespass is in the nature of a taking which is available to the partnership ; & in such case the jury should find, not only whether defts. were partners, but also whether, before the trespass, they all joined in ordering it, or whether, afterwards, they concurred, & received the benefit of it.—PETRIE v. LAMONT (1841), Car. & M. 93, N. In an action against two persons in partnership as fitters, for omitting to send such certificate, in a case where a defective certificate had been sent:—Held : since it was within the scope of the partnership authority to put coals on board the ship, & the cause of action was an act of omission, they were each equally guilty of it, notwithstanding the defective certificate & declaration were in fact made by one only.—GRANT v. MATHEWSON (1843), 1 L. The earlier instalments were paid out of the partnership assets, & later ones by D., after judgment for them had been recovered. D. demanded from P. that, in order to enforce his right to contribution against H., the judgments should be delivered to him as provided by Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (c. 60), s. 5, but H. informed P. that D.'s right to contribution depended on the equitable rights between D. & himself, in respect of a partnership action then pending between them ; upon which P. declined to hand over the judgments. D. then brought an action against P. claiming (a) delivery of the judgments ; (b) damages for non-delivery ; (c) a declaration that by reason of the refusal to assign the judgments D. was released from all liability in respect of any future instalments :—Held : D. was not released from liability in respect of future instalments, inasmuch as there had been no alteration of the original conditions as to the liability of the parties ; & the failure to assign the judgments would have only operated to release him if & so far as the delay in handing over might have made them less valuable.—DALE v. POWELL, POWELL v. DALE & HOOD (1911), 105 L. R. for damages for breach of a contract entered into by pltf. with a firm in which R. was at the time a partner. The partnership had been dissolved before the issue of the writ. The former partners E. & P. were subsequently added as defts., & each put in a separate defence. P. pleaded & proved that pltf. had not on his part complied with the conditions of the contract, & as against P. the action was dismissed. R. & E. did not in their defences raise the plea upon which P. was successful. The trial judge refused leave to R. & E. to amend, & gave judgment against them jointly for the sum claimed. On appeal :—Held : inasmuch as three defts. were joint contractors, pltf. had but one & the same cause of action against them all ; the fact established by P., which was common to the whole contract & fatal to any claim upon it, enured to the benefit of the other joint contractors, whether they had pleaded it or not ; & accordingly judgment must be given dismissing the action against R. & E. also.—PIRIE v. RICHARDSON, [1927] 1 K. One of the trustees receives the money, & advances it to a partnership of merchants, without taking any security. He receives the interest from the partnership, & pays it over to the wife regularly up to the time of his death; afterwards, the partnership pays the interest to the wife directly, & without the intervention of the surviving trustee. In the partnership books the accounts relating to the whole transaction are entered, as between the wife & the partnership only. 544. —— With option to withdraw—Exercise of option within agreed time.]—In May, 1839, A., a creditor of the firm of B. & S., proposed to become a partner with them, the terms of the intended partnership being, that A. should bring in £1,000 in money & £1,000 in goods, & should be entitled to one-third of the profits, & be a dormant partner; the name of the firm was to be changed to B., S. & Co., & the partnership was to date from Apr. 1, 1839, but A. reserved to himself the option of determining, at any period within twelve months from that day, whether he would become a partner. The name of the firm was altered accordingly, & a new banking account was opened in the name of B., S. & Co.; & A. advanced the £2,000 to the firm; but within the twelve months he declared his determination not to enter into the partnership:—Held: A. was not liable for goods supplied to the firm after May, 1839, for that he never became a complete partner.—GABRIEL v. EVILL (1842), 9 M. & W. 297; 11 L. 546. —— Holding out as partner.]—In an action on a bill of exchange, purporting to be drawn & accepted by a mining co., wherein pltf., an indorsee for value, sought to charge deft. as a member of that co., it was proved that the bill had been drawn & accepted by order of the directors of the co. It was proved further, that the co. had entered into a contract for the purchase of mines, taken a counting house in London, engaged clerks, & also an agent to reside in the country, & had worked some of the mines; that deft. having applied to the secretary of the co. for shares, some were appropriated to him; that he paid an instalment of £15 per share; that he attended at the counting house of the co., & there signed some deed, & afterwards attended a general meeting of the shareholders:—Held: assuming this to be sufficient evidence of deft.'s being a partner in the co., it was incumbent on pltf. to prove that the directors of that co. had authority to bind the other members, by drawing & accepting bills of exchange; & pltf. not having produced the deed of co-partnership, nor given any evidence to show that it was necessary, for the purpose of carrying on the business of that mining co., or usual for other mining cos. to draw or accept bills of exchange, there was no evidence to go to the jury of such an authority to draw or accept any bills, & still less to draw or accept bills in this form, which in effect were promissory notes. Semble: there was not sufficient evidence to show that the deft. had ever become a complete partner in the co., or that he had held himself out to the world as such partner.

If it could have been proved that deft. had held himself out to be a partner, not "to the world," for that is a loose expression, but to pltf. himself, or under such circumstances of publicity as to satisfy a jury that pltf. knew of it & believed him to be a partner, he would be liable to pltf. in all transactions in which he engaged & gave credit to deft., upon the faith of his being such partner. Deft. would be bound by an indirect representation to pltf., arising from his conduct, as much as if he had stated to him directly & in express terms that he was a partner, & pltf. had acted upon that statement (PARKE, J.).—DICKINSON v. VALPY (1829), 10 B. & C. 128; L. & Welsb. 6; 5 Man. & Ry. 554. —— —— No association at time of discounting.]—On June 24, 1824, C. agreed to become a partner with A. & B., the business to be carried on in the names of A. & B. for the benefit of A., B. & C.; that the partnership should be considered as commencing on May 18, preceding. Before June 24, A. & B. had opened an account with certain bankers, which was continued in their names till Sept. 22, when the partnership as to B. was dissolved. All the business with the bankers was transacted by B., & the bankers did not know that C. was a partner till the account was closed. B. used the accounts for the purposes of the firm of which C. was a member, as well as for others. On May 21, he indorsed a bill of exchange in the partnership names of A. & B. to the bankers, who discounted it, & placed it to the credit of the account. On July 13, he indorsed two others in a similar manner:—Held: as the bankers did not know that the money raised by these bills was intended to be applied to other than partnership purposes, C. was liable on the last two bills, but not on the first, he not having been an actual partner at the time when it was discounted.—VERE v. ASHBY (1829), 10 B. & C. 288; L. & Welsb. 20; 8 L. 562. —— —— ——.]—(1) An indorsee of a bill of exchange cannot recover against acceptors of a bill accepted by one who was formerly a partner, if such person had ceased to be a partner at the time of the accepting of the bill, even though the bill was accepted for a partnership debt, unless the person still held himself out to the world as a partner, as if he allowed his name to remain on the door of the house of business, or the like.

(2) If one of the partners gave notice to a witness that they had ceased to be partners, that might be evidence for defts., but a conversation between the witness & one of defts., in which he so stated, is clearly not so.—DOLMAN v. ORCHARD (1825), 2 C. & P. 104, N. P.

563. —— —— Acting as partner.]—(1) Where party is sued, on a liability as partner, & he is shown to have been once a partner, then, even although it appears that the partnership has been dissolved, & if there has been no notice of the dissolution, any evidence that he has continued to give orders & bills in the name of the firm, & to act as if he were partner with the same person, though in a different business, & notwithstanding that it is proved that he was in fact only a paid servant, will be sufficient to render him liable for goods ordered by him in the name of the supposed firm.

(2) A party is liable as a partner, if he has held himself out or allowed another to hold him out as a partner (ERLE, J.).—MULFORD v. GRIFFIN (1858), 1 F. & F. 145, N. P.

566. —— Continuing contract — Retirement with indemnity—Variation of original continuing contract.]—Where a member of a firm which is under a continuing contract retires with an indemnity, the continuing partners are his agents for carrying on the contract; & although after notice of the retirement the retiring partner is in a sense a surety on the principle of Oakeley v. Pusheller (1836), 10 Bli. N. S. 548, that authority will not be extended so far as to discharge him from the contract by reason of acts of the continuing partners fairly within the scope of their authority in carrying out the contract.

Continuing partners under such a contract, which (inter alia), gave the firm the power of appointing an arbitrator in case of dispute, entered into an agreement by which they waived a very doubtful point of construction on the original contract, & referred differences to arbitrators, one of whom was selected by themselves instead of by the firm as constituted at the date of the contract:—Held: this was not such a variation of the original contract as to discharge the retired partner.—OAKFORD v. EUROPEAN & AMERICAN STEAM SHIPPING CO., LTD. 568. —— ——.]—P., who had been a partner in a firm of solrs., & had during that time attended to the management of a certain trust, continued to act in relation to a change of investment of part of the trust funds after he had retired from the firm as if he were still a partner, & wrote to the trustees from the office of the firm saying that he had obtained a power of attorney authorising "our brokers" to sell the stock, & asked them to sign it, & send it to the office of the firm. The trustees did as requested, & the stock was sold, & the money received by P.'s late partners, who misapplied it, & it was lost to the trust. It appeared that the tenant for life was aware at this time that P. had retired from the firm, but the trustees were not:—Held: P. was liable to make good to the trust the capital sum lost, & interest from the last day on which any was paid.—SLACK v. PARKER (1886), 54 L. T. 212.

569. —— .]—Testator who had been a partner in the firm of A. & W. Smith & Co. nominated his wife & two of the three remaining partners in the firm as his trustees, & he specially authorised his trustees to allow his share of the capital to remain as a loan to the firm so long as his trustees should think it safe to allow it to remain. The wife died. The amount of the capital was ascertained & continued as a loan to the firm, but without any bond or other obligation being given for it. The third partner, not a trustee, was dissatisfied with the conduct of the firm's business, the result being that he agreed to retire under an agreement by which the two trustee partners paid him a sum of £9,000 for his interest in the firm, & by which the trustee partners undertook to meet all the liabilities of the firm, take over all the assets, & relieve the third partner of all debts. The new firm was carried on by the two trustee partners under the old name, & it paid a half-year's interest on the debt due to the trust estate. A year after the retirement of the third partner, the trustee partners, as trustees, granted to the old firm & the third partner a discharge of the debt due to the trust. About a month afterwards the new firm became insolvent & the two partners bkpt. The trustee partners resigned their trusteeship, & new trustees were appointed, who acted as creditors on the new firm, & received a dividend out of the new firm's assets. They then raised against the retired third partner this action, claiming reduction of the discharge & payment of the balance of the trust debt:—Held: the discharge was a breach of trust on the part of the trustee partners from which the third partner could not profit, the discharge being gratuitous; the actings of the new trustees in ranking as creditors on the new firm's assets did not discharge the liability of the old firm; & the third partner was liable to make good the loss to the trust estate.—SMITH v. PATRICK, [1901] A. 570. —— Negligent execution of trust.]—A. having a reversionary interest under the will of W. deceased, agreed before his marriage to assign it to a trustee of a post-nuptial settlement which he duly executed in 1871. A firm of solrs., who were employed in 1874 to file a bill in Chancery for the removal of the trustee under that deed & to obtain the appointment of new trustees & a conveyance of the trust funds, failed to give notice before Apr. 1879, of this to the trustees under W.'s will. A. fraudulently assigned in Feb. 1879, his reversionary share to B. & notice of this assignment was at once given on B.'s behalf to the trustees under W.'s will. The trust funds being thus lost to the new trustees, they brought an action, which as against two of the solrs. was only commenced in Feb. 1883, to recover the principal sum so lost, & interest. H., one of defts., had left the firm just before the conveyance to the new trustees had been executed:—Held: though the solrs. had been paid out of the trust funds, there had been a retainer of them by the trustees, in not giving notice of the conveyance to the new trustees,

571. —— Transactions partly during membership of firm.]—A Scotsman in Calcutta opened an account with a banking & agency house there in 1786 ; & died in 1810, having been insane from 1793. A partner in the house, being in Scotland in 1812, inclosed, in a letter to the customer's relatives there, an account current with him from 1787 to 1810, signed by the firm, bringing out annual balances in his favour, composed of annual accumulations of Indian interest, the last balance expressed "to bear interest at 9 per cent. per annum." In 1835, the customer's relatives obtained administration of his estate, & prosecuted actions, which were before commenced in the Scottish Cts., on the account current, against another partner who joined the firm in 1793, & continued a partner through several changes till 1820 ; & they claimed interest at 9 per cent., upon the last balance in 1810 :—Held : a debt was sufficiently constituted against the firm by the account rendered by them, together with interest at 9 per cent. on the last balance in 1810, down to final decree ; & one partner was bound by the account so rendered.—FERGUSSON v. FYFFE (1841), 8 Cl. & Fin. 121 ; 8 E. 572. Bill of exchange—Dishonoured after retirement—Notice to continuing partner—Whether notice to retired partner.]—Where a bill drawn by partners is dishonoured after the dissolution of the partnership notice of dishonour to the continuing partner is sufficient notice to the retiring partner.

A bill of exchange dated Aug. 11, 1913, & drawn by a partnership firm consisting of two partners, B. & K. upon & accepted by a French co. was indorsed to pltfs. by the two partners on Aug. 21, 1913, in payment of a previously dishonoured bill. On Aug. 27, shortly after the bill of Aug. 11 was given to pltfs., the partnership between B. & K. was dissolved ; the assets thereafter belonged to B., who carried on the business in the firm name. B. covenanting with K. to discharge all the debts & liabilities of the firm. Notice of the dissolution & of the fact that B. would discharge the liabilities of the firm was given to pltfs. The bill became due on Oct. 11, 1913, but shortly before that date B. gave to pltfs. another bill dated Oct. 1, & payable upon Oct. 31, drawn in the firm name upon & accepted by the same French co. for an amount exceeding the amount of the bill of Aug. 11, & at the same time B. asked the pltfs. not to present the bill of Aug. 11 for payment. The bill of Aug. 11 was notwithstanding presented for payment & dishonoured, & notice of dishonour was given by pltfs. to B. The bill of Oct. 1 was also not paid ; it was, however, not noted or protested, & no notice of dishonour was given to either B. or K. Pltfs. sued K. upon the bill of Aug. 11, & alternatively upon the consideration for the bill :—Held : the notice of dishonour of the bill of Aug. 11 which was given by pltfs. to B. was a sufficient notice to K. within Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 49, notwithstanding that the partnership between them had been previously dissolved, but K. was not liable on the bill inasmuch as by the terms of the dissolution of partnership & by the notice to pltfs. he had ceased to be a principal debtor, & had become a surety only, & had been discharged through pltfs. giving time to B. by taking the bill of Oct. 1 in lieu of payment of the bill of Aug. 11. —GOLDFARB v. BARTLETT & KREMER, [1920] 1 K. In 1842 A. retired from the firm, but this fact was not advertised in the London Gazette, nor was any alteration made in the pass book:—Held: the mere fact of D., one of the firm of G. 587. Constructive acceptance.]—H., an officer serving in the King's Forces in India, in 1815, deposited money with A., B., C., & D., bankers in Calcutta, trading under the firm of A. & Co. In 1818, A. came to England, having executed a deed whereby he was to cease to be a partner in the firm in 1822, & E. was to be admitted a partner in his room. In 1822, A. accordingly retired from, & E. came into the partnership, & the dissolution was announced in the Calcutta Gazette. It appeared to be the practice of the firm to give notice of changes of partnership to their customers by circular letters; there was, however, no proof that any letter reached H. announcing A.'s retirement. In 1822, A. became a candidate for a seat in the direction of the East India co., & repeatedly published an address to the proprietors of East India Stock in several newspapers, stating that his connection with mercantile concerns in India had ceased. Two of these newspapers were taken in at the reading room of a town where H. who had returned to England, was then resident. The accounts current of A. & co. were transmitted yearly to H., from 1817 to 1832, & the rates of interest allowed on them varied several times after the year 1822. In 1831, H. executed a power of attorney to the then members of the firm of A. & Co., to collect the effects of a testator in India. In 1832, A. & co. failed. In 1833, H. executed another power of attorney to C., who also had then retired from the firm, to prove debts against the estate of the bkpts., naming them, & describing them as carrying on business under the firm of A. & co., & to receive dividends:—Held: these facts constituted sufficient evidence to go to the jury to show that H. knew that A. had retired from the firm, & E. had come in in his place; & he had agreed to discharge A. from liability & take the new firm as his debtors.—HART v. ALEXANDER (1837), 2 M. & W. 484; Murp. & H. 63; 6 L. At Midsummer, 1828, W. retired from the partnership, & in Jan. 1829, H. entered into partnership with S. & H. & S. carried on the business under the firm of H. & S. until 1831. Pltf. gave receipts for the rent as received from H. after W. retired, & as received from H. & S. after S. became partner with H. In Feb. 1829, pltf. gave to H. a letter to pltf.'s attorney, signifying, that a lease might be made to H. & S. but this letter was kept by H. & not acted upon & no lease was prepared:—Held: W. remained liable to pltf. for the rent accruing in 1831.—GRAHAM v. WHICHELO (1832), 1 Cr. & M. 188; 3 Tyr. 201; 2 L. C. Liability of Estate of Deceased Partner.

(a) In General.

See Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 9.

592. General rule—Estate severally liable.] The rule in equity that a partnership contract is to be treated as joint & several applies only to the case of the administration of the estate of a deceased member of a partnership; & consequently a judgment recovered against one or more of several joint contractors is, even without satisfaction, a bar to an action against another joint contractor sued alone. This rule is not affected by the operation of Jud. Acts.

W. M. & H. were jointly interested in certain speculations in iron, & it was agreed between the parties that "the financial arrangements should be managed entirely" by W. & M. K. advanced money to W. & M. for the purpose of these speculations, & brought an action to recover the debt, & obtained judgment, but W. & M. became bkpt., & the judgment remained unsatisfied. K. afterwards discovered that H. had been a partner in the speculations, & brought a second action against him:—Held: the second action was not maintainable, the first judgment being a bar to it, though still unsatisfied.—KENDALL v. HAMILTON (1879), 4 App. Cas. 504; 48 L. 593. ——.]—The creditor of a partnership firm, although not strictly a joint & several creditor, has concurrent remedies against the estate of a deceased partner & the surviving partner; & it makes no difference which remedy he pursues first. But it is necessary that the surviving partner should be present at taking the accounts of the estate of deceased partner, & that the partnership creditor should not come into competition with the separate creditors of deceased partner.

A father & son being in partnership, became indebted to pltfs. who were bankers. The son died, & the father brought an action & obtained judgment for the administration of his son's estate. Pltfs. carried in a claim for the debt against the separate estate, being at that time unable to prove the existence of a partnership, & were declared entitled to a dividend. Afterwards the father died, & pltfs. having obtained proof of the partnership, brought an action to make his estate liable for the partnership debt:—Held: (1) the proceedings in the previous action did not constitute a res judicata or estoppel so as to prevent pltfs. from recovering the debt; but they were put under an undertaking to postpone their dividend on the son's separate estate to the claims of his separate creditors.

(2) Where persons have had dealings with a partnership firm the mere publication of the dissolution in the Gazette is not sufficient to affect such persons with notice, if they continue to give credit on the footing of the continuance of the partnership. It is necessary in such a case that actual knowledge should be brought home to the persons who had previously given credit to the firm (SIR J. HANNEN).—Re HODGSON, BECKETT v. RAMSDALE (1885), 31 Ch. D. 177; 55 L. J. Ch. 241; 54 L. T. 222; 34 W. R. 127; 2 T. L. R. 73, C. A.

596. Effect of want of notice of death.]—(1) V., a customer of the banking-house of D. & co., transferred to N. a partner in the firm, a sum of stock by way of security for money borrowed of them, & gave notes for the amount, payable on the stock being retransferred to him. He paid off these notes, & afterwards borrowed a further sum on the joint note of himself & his son, without calling for a retransfer. The stock so transferred having been blended with other stock, of which N. was in like manner possessed by way of security for other customers, was sold by the partnership, & the produce applied to the use of the partnership, except a small balance still remaining in the name of N. D., another of the partners, afterwards died, & the partnership was carried on without any alteration of firm till the surviving partners became bkpt. On the bill of V. against the assignees of bkpts., & against the representatives of D. it was decided that he was entitled to the stock remaining in the name of N., the other creditors in respect of stock transferred having been satisfied their demands, as being sufficiently appropriated; to set off, against the joint note of himself & his son, so much of the money received by the partnership out of the sale of the remainder of the stock as was equal to the amount of such joint note; to prove the residue as a debt against the estate of bkpts.; & to receive from D.'s estate the amount of the deficiency.

(2) The death of a partner of itself works a dissolution of the partnership & the mere want of notice does not, it seems, make the estate of deceased partner liable to the debts of the continuing partners. Secus, if one of the surviving partners is an exor. of deceased.—VULLIAMY v. NOBLE (1817), 3 Mer. 593; 36 E. 597. Liability to joint creditors.]—A joint creditor by simple contract may go against the assets of a deceased partner but cannot before the account retain separate property of that partner in his possession.—STEPHENSON v. CHISWELL (1797), 3 Ves. 566; 30 E. R. 1158, L. C.

598. —— In priority to separate creditors.]—Joint creditors of a partnership are not entitled to have the separate estate of a deceased partner applied in payment of their joint debts, until separate creditors of such deceased partners are paid.

A joint creditor of a partnership is entitled to a decree in one suit, on behalf of himself & all other creditors, against the representatives of several deceased partners & the surviving partners, for the administration of estates of all deceased partners.—BROWN v. DOUGLAS (1840), 11 Sim. 283; 10 L. 599. Transaction in partnership name—Indorsement of bill of exchange.]—(1) A. & B., who were partners, & C., as their surety, gave a joint & several promissory note to D., by which they "jointly & severally promise to pay" to D. the amount of a partnership debt, due from A. & B. The note was signed by A. & B., not as individuals, but in their partnership firm, & by C. the surety:—Held: this note could not be treated as the several note of each one of the three, but as the several note only of the surety; & the joint note of A. & B.; &, on the bkpcy. of A., who had survived his partner B., the holder of the note could only rank as a creditor against the joint estate.

It follows, if I am right, that it is only as the surviving partner of his firm that bkpt. became severally indebted upon the note, & the proof therefore must rank, for the purposes of dividend, among the partnership debts, & not among those which in the lifetime of his partner were merely the separate debts of A., or which were incurred by A. after the death of B. (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).

(2) A. survived B. his partner, & continued the business in the same firm of "A. & B."; at the time of B.'s death, a large balance was owing by them to their bankers, to whom A., some time after B.'s death, indorsed several bills in the partnership firm of A. & B.:—Held: it could not be inferred from this circumstance alone, that the bills were so indorsed upon a partnership transaction of A. & B., & the bankers might prove the amount of the bills against the separate estate of A.—Re MANLEY, Ex p. WILSON (1842), 3 Mont. One of the partners conducted the matter, & delivered an abstract of title, suppressing all reference to prior mtges. within his knowledge affecting part of the proposed security. The other partner having died, & the security appearing to be deficient:—Held: his estate was liable to a claim on the part of the transferees of the mtge., inasmuch as the loss accrued by the default of the surviving partner within the scope of the partnership business.—SAWYER v. GOODWIN (1867), 36 L. 604. Business carried on abroad — Action brought in England—Defence based on foreign law.]—Creditors of a firm carrying on business in Spain brought an action in England, on behalf of the firm's creditors, against the exors. of a member of the firm, who had died in England leaving property there, claiming that his estate, after payment of his funeral & testamentary expenses & separate debts, was liable for the firm's debts, & asking for administration on that footing. The defence was that the rights of the parties were governed by the law of Spain, under which the firm's creditors were not entitled to proceed against the separate estate of deceased partner until after they had exhausted the property of the firm:—Held: the matter stated in the defence was mere procedure, & the defence was bad.—Re DOETSCH, MATHESON v. LUDWIG, [1896] 2 Ch. 836; 65 L. 605. No obligation incurred — During period of partnership.]—Prior to 1895, E. & co., manufacturers, had employed F. & co. to sell goods for them on commission. The course of business was for E. & co. to send goods to F. & co., who would forward them to the purchasers, receive the purchase-money, &, after deducting their commission, account to E. & co. for the balance. In Jan. 1895, one of the partners in F. & co. died, & the business was then carried on by the surviving partner. Shortly before the death F. & co. had procured an order for goods, none of which were delivered until after the death, when they were sent to the surviving partner, who forwarded them to the purchaser & received the purchase-money, but did not account for it. In 1896 E. & co. obtained judgment against the surviving partner for the balance of the account due to them from F. & co., but nothing was recovered under that judgment. On a claim by E. & co. to prove against the estate of deceased partner:—Held: as to the transactions which took place after the death, the contract of agency between F. & co. & E. & co. was determined by the death, & consequently no "debt or obligation" within Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 9, had been incurred while deceased was a partner, & his estate was not liable.—FRIEND v. YOUNG, [1897] 2 Ch. 421; 77 L. 618. Liability to equitable creditors.]—Equitable creditors cannot prove their debts under a decree for the proof of debts, without a declaration of their right by the ct., or some special direction to the master. Therefore one partner having died, & the surviving partners afterwards becoming bkpt., creditors, by promissory notes of the original partnership, cannot, under a common decree, prove their claims against the estate of deceased partner.—BOWLES v. YORK (1823), 1 L. J. O. S. Ch. 134.

619. Liability of deceased's estate for balance.]—VULLIAMY v. NOBLE, No. 596, ante.

620. ——.]—Joint creditor by simple contract may proceed against a clear residue of the assets of deceased partner, the survivor being insolvent; & may set off against a debt to deceased, from the survivor & himself as his surety, a debt to the survivor from deceased, which was agreed to be applied in liquidation of the debt secured.—CHEETHAM v. CROOK (1825), M'Cle. & Yo. 307; 148 E. R. 429.

621. —— Retirement of partner before decease.]—A. & B., partners, were indebted to pltf. on a promissory note. A. retired from the partnership. At the time of his retirement a large sum was due to him from the concern; for securing the payment of which B. gave him his bond, & it was agreed between them that B. should take on himself all the liabilities of the firm. For some years, pltf. received interest from B., dealing wholly with him. A. died. B. became bkpt., & pltf. proved his debt under the bkpcy., & filed his bill against A.'s exor. for the difference. It did not clearly appear whether pltf. was privy to the agreement between A. & B., or whether A. left assets in B.'s hands sufficient to meet the partnership liabilities. An issue was directed to try whether A. was indebted to pltf. at the time of filing the bill, upon an admission that he was living at that time:—Semble: the acceptance of the sole security of the continuing partner for a debt due from the firm may be a sufficient consideration for the discharge of a retiring partner.—MILLS v. BOYD (1842), 6 Jur. 943.

622. No joint assets.]—In creditor's suit for administering the assets of B., joint creditor of A. & B. was permitted to prove, A. having become bkpt., & it appearing that there were no joint assets of A. & B.—COWELL v. SIKES (1827), 2 Russ. 191; 38 E. R. 307.

623. Liability not dependent on bankruptcy.]—In a suit by joint creditor against the representatives of deceased partner & the surviving partner:—Held: pltf. entitled to satisfaction out of the assets of deceased partner, though it was not proved that the surviving partner was insolvent.

The surviving partner is properly joined as deft. in such a suit, being interested to contest the demand of pltf., & of all joint creditors, but the remedy against him is altogether at law.—WILKINSON v. HENDERSON (1833), 1 My. & K. 582; 2 L. J. Ch. 190; 39 E. R. 801.

(2) But to a bill filed by joint creditors for the purpose of obtaining relief against the assets of deceased partner or joint contractor, the surviving partners or jont contractors must be made parties, though no decree is sought against them; such persons being necessarily interested in taking the accounts.—THORPE v. JACKSON (1837), 2 Y. & C. 627. ——.]—R. B. deposited £110 with Messrs. H. B. L., C. F., E. L., & C. S. F., bankers, upon a deposit note, payable twenty days after sight. In June, 1833, H. B. L., died, having, by his will, devised his real & personal estate to trustees, one of whom was his son, H. L., upon trust to raise money to pay his debts, etc., & subject thereto upon trust for H. L., whom he appointed sole exor. H. L., was admitted a partner in the bank. In 1835 E. L. died, & in 1843 C. F. died. C. S. F., & H. L., continued the business, but became bkpts. in 1847. R. B., from the death of H. B. L., received interest at the bank upon his deposit note until the bkpcy., when he proved his debt against the bkpt.'s estate; & on a bill filed to make the real & personal estate of H. B. L. liable to the payment of the £110:—Held: (1) the interest was not paid by the continuing partners, as agents of H. B. L., testator; no agency could be implied; the interest was paid on account of the firm; (2) R. B., had accepted the surviving partners as his debtors, & the devise made by H. B. 629. —— Novation—Banker & customer.]—R. left £1,400 on deposit with the E. Bank, for which she received the usual deposit note from the firm. One of the partners died, & she subsequently withdrew some of her money at different times, & finally received a fresh deposit note in precisely similar terms for the balance of £850. The bank having stopped payment, its assets being insufficient, & the surviving partner being bkpt., R. claimed to prove against the estate of deceased partner for the amount remaining due to her on the deposit note:—Held: she was entitled so to prove, the acceptance of the fresh deposit note being insufficient evidence of novation to discharge the estate of original debtor, deceased partner.—Re HEAD, HEAD v. HEAD, [1893] 3 Ch. 426; 63 L. 631. —— ——.]—Prior to Apr. 1872, a firm of bankers, consisting of two partners, A. & B., received money on deposit at interest, for which they gave deposit notes in the usual form to the depositors, who, when the amount on deposit was increased or diminished, gave up their old notes & received fresh ones for the new amount. In Apr. 1872, X. & Y. were admitted into the partnership, & notice of the change in the firm was given to the depositors. A fortnight afterwards A. died, & the business was carried on under the same firm by B., X., & Y. In 1874 B. died, & the business was carried on by X. & Y., still under the same firm, until 1875, when the bank stopped payment, & went into liquidation. The depositors all knew of A.'s death, & none of them made any claim against his estate. Some of them had not altered the amount of their deposit, but retained the notes they had received in his lifetime. They had, however, received interest from X. & Y. Others had increased & others had diminished the amount of their deposit after A.'s death, receiving in each case fresh deposit notes; & they had all proved in the bkpcy. of X. & Y. for the amount due on their notes as money "advanced & lent" to bkpts.:—Held: in each case there had been a complete novation, & that none of the depositors were entitled to prove against the estate of A.—BILBOROUGH v. HOLMES (1876), 5 Ch. More than six years back they received various sums of money on account of the estate, having a set-off in respect of their bill of costs, but which bill they did not deliver to the assignee till within six years. Beyond the six years A. & B., upon an agreement that A. should pay all the debts, dissolved partnership; & the assignee, with knowledge of this fact, continued to employ A. alone as the solr. to the commission, & no attempt was made to charge B. with the moneys received by A. & B. till very lately, viz., when an official assignee was appointed. Nor had B. ever acknowledged any liability to account:—Held: (1) as between B. & the creditors, neither the Stat. On Oct. 27, 1810, A. assigns his property to his creditors, who covenant not to sue him, & that if they do, the deed of assignment shall be a release to him, which deed is signed by B. A. after signing the deed of dissolution, having contracted debts in the name of the firm, B. pays them:—Held: (1) B. was liable for those debts, the covenant not to sue A. not operating as a release to B.; (2) supposing it had, the creditors would have had an equitable claim on B., which would have justified his paying the money; &, therefore, B. was entitled to recover it from A. as money paid to his use.—HUTTON v. EYRE (1815), 6 Taunt. 289; 1 Marsh. 603; 128 E. 640. —— —— Ostensible partner.]—Though creditor has a right to sue jointly with his debtor a person who has held himself out as a partner with debtor, yet, as between themselves, the ostensible partner is a surety only, not liable to contribution, & therefore a release of the ostensible partner by creditor does not release debtor.

J. gave to a bank a guarantee for £1,000 in favour of A. & co., representing at the same time to the bank manager that he was a partner in that firm, but that he wished the fact of his partnership to be kept secret. The guarantee described him as a partner in the firm. Some time afterwards A. alone, as A. & co., filed a liquidation petition, & the bank tendered a proof in the liquidation for advances which they had made to A. & co. after the guarantee. After this the bank sued J. at law for £5,059, alleging him to have been a partner with A. J. filed a bill in Chancery to restrain the proceedings in the action, denying the alleged partnership. A compromise was entered into between the bank & J., by which £2,818 was paid to them in satisfaction of their claim against J. & of a claim which they made against S., who had also given them a guarantee on behalf of A. & co. J.'s guarantee was given up to him, a receipt for £1,000 being indorsed on it by the bank manager "in payment & discharge of the within guarantee, & also of all claims against J. in reference to or in connection with A. & co." :—Held: J. must be taken to have been an actual partner with A., but that the receipt did not operate to release J. so as to preclude the bank from maintaining a proof against A.'s estate.—Re ARMITAGE, Ex p. GOOD (1877), 5 Ch. In Jan. 1829, it was agreed that the settlement of the partnership accounts, & all questions concerning the respective liabilities, & the mode of winding up the affairs, & the manner & time of dissolving the partnership, should be referred to an arbitrator; & it was afterwards agreed that S. & E. should respectively bid for the plant, utensils, & fixtures, & the referee was to declare the highest bidder to be the purchaser. In Apr. 1829, S. having been declared the highest bidder, became the purchaser, & the works were entirely given up to him:—Held: the partnership was then determined, although the referee had made no order as to the dissolution; & S. had no authority, after that time, to bind E. by a promissory note.

Receipt of insurance money—For goods destroyed while in possession of partnership—Policy in name of individual partner.]—One of two partners, after the dissolution of the partnership, received from an insurance office, under a policy effected in his own name, the value of goods belonging to pltf. which had been deposited with the firm for the purpose of manufacture, & destroyed by fire:—Held: the sum so obtained from office was not money had & received by defts. to the use of pltf.—ARMITAGE v. WINTERBOTTOM (1840), 1 Man. & G. 130; 1 Scott, N. 651. Contract of service—Whether dissolution a breach—Dismissal of servant by remaining partner.]—It is questionable whether a dissolution of partnership is, per se, a breach of a contract by the firm to employ a person in their service, though a dismissal by a partner remaining would be so; but even assuming that the dissolution would be a breach, yet if the person they have retained accepts, upon the dissolution, an agreement with a new firm, comprising members of the old partnership & also new partners, that will be evidence to support a plea of exoneration, in an action against the members of the old firm on the original agreement, even apart from any express agreement to cancel it; because there cannot be two co-existent agreements by the same person to serve different firms, composed of different parties; & the second agreement is thus an implied surrender of the first.—HOBSON v. COWLEY (1858), 27 L. The continuing partners were willing to employ pltf. on the same terms as before for the remainder of the period, but he declined to serve them. Defts. had the option of renewing the agreement at its termination. During the five years defts. dissolved partnership, & pltfs. sued for damages for breaches of the contract committed after the dissolution :—Held : there was no implied term in the contract that defts. would not dissolve partnership during the term & thus disable themselves from carrying out the contract, & therefore defts. were not liable.—BOVINE, LTD. v. DENT & WILKINSON (1904), 21 T. 656. Whether old firm discharged — Creditor continuing business with new firm.]—A person depositing money with bankers, & taking their accountable receipts, does not, by continuing to leave his money in the bank after a dissolution of the original firm & the constitution of a new one, which consists of some of the members of the old bank & of other persons, discharge the former partners who have gone out, although he receives interest regularly from the new firm, gives them no notice, & continues to transact business with them in the common course, & that for a period of four years, & until they become insolvent. 657. —— Acceptance of new firm by creditor—When acceptance inferred.] — A. & B. being partners, A. retires, & B. continues the business, having the partnership effects. C., a creditor, being told by B. that he must look for payment to him alone, draws a bill of exchange on B. for his debt. The bill is dishonoured, & C. gives B. time to pay. These facts raise a question for the jury, whether there was not an agreement between B. & C. that C. should accept B. as his sole debtor, & should take the bill of exchange from him alone, by way of satisfaction for the debt due from both. Such an agreement, followed by the receipt of the bill from B. would be a good defence by way of accord & satisfaction, in an action by C. against A. & B. jointly.—THOMPSON v. PERCIVAL (1834), 5 B. & Ad. 925 ; 3 Nev. & M. At the time when the notes were given G. stated by letter that he looked to S. & K., & knew nothing of the co. in the matter. The co. had the benefit of the advances. More than a year afterwards G. applied to the co. for a year's interest, which the co. paid, & at the same time sent to G. & co. a cheque by S. & K. for the whole sum remaining to their credit, directing G. & co. to place it to the credit of the co.:—Held: having regard to G.'s express repudiation of the co. as his debtors, the subsequent circumstances were not enough to make them such, & he had no right of proof against the estate of the co. when wound up.—Re SMITH, KNIGHT & Co., Ex p. GIBSON (1869), 4 Ch. W. & Sons," thereinafter called "the manufacturers," which provided (inter alia) that the co. should purchase from the manufacturers & from no other person or firm all the goods therein specified which the co. might require over & above orders to the amount of £10,000 per annum reserved for another firm. On Jan. 1, 1893, the firm of R. W. & Sons was by the retirement therefrom of R. J. W. dissolved, & T. W. & W. R. W. alone continued to trade under the style of "R. W. & Sons." The co. brought an action against T. W. & W. R. W., claiming a declaration that the agreement was determined on Jan. 1, 1893, & that the co. were not bound thereby since that date. Defts. alleged that the co. had had repeated notices of the retirement of R. J. W., but had nevertheless treated the agreement as subsisting between them & the defts. until April, 1896, when they first attempted to repudiate it; & that the co. had by these acts adopted the agreement with defts., & affected a novation thereof, if any adoption or novation was in fact required:—Held: as the agreement required on the part of the manufacturers a certain amount of skill, knowledge, & supervision in its performance, the work agreed to be done not being capable of being performed by everyone, it was clearly of a personal nature, & therefore non-assignable, & was determinable at the option of the co. on the retirement of R. J. W.; but, as the co. had elected to continue doing business with the manufacturers on the terms of the agreement, notwithstanding the change in the firm, it must be treated as still subsisting & binding.—JAEGER'S SANITARY WOOLLEN SYSTEM CO., LTD. v. WALKER & SONS (1897), 77 L. Pltfs. continued to supply K. with goods & he gave them his acceptance for the amount & also paid them several sums on account but without any specific appropriation. After some months pltfs. sent in their account to K. beginning on the debit side with the acceptance for £132 &, after giving him credit for the sums paid showing a balance against K. of £92. After this K. paid pltfs. two other sums which, with the sums already paid amounted to more than £132. Pltfs. having sued K. & D. on their acceptance for £132, D. pleaded payment:—Held: pltfs. having sent in the statement to K. treating the whole as one account, the subsequent payments must be appropriated to the earlier items of the account; & consequently the plea was proved.—HOOPER v. KEAY (1875), 1 Q. 666. —— Purporting to be made by both partners—Security binding on firm.]—One of two partners procured the discount of a promissory note of the firm, on an agreement for a mtge. of shares belonging to the firm in certain ships & their freight, & of the policies of insurance effected by the firm on the shares. A mtge. deed was prepared, purporting to be made by both partners, but was only executed by one of them. At the time of the execution of the deed, one of the ships was lost, but this fact was not then known to the parties:—Held: the security was binding on the firm; notwithstanding the execution of the deed by one partner only, & passed the insurance money, although the deed was not registered according to the shipping Acts.—Re BOYD, Re WILSON & VAUSE, Ex p. BOSANQUET (1847), De G. 432, Ct. of R.

Before the voyage, S. & co. spent a large sum in repairs, & for the purpose, as was alleged, of taking up bills which they had accepted on account of the repairs, they borrowed a sum of money from pltfs., & assigned the freight to them by way of security. On the arrival of the vessel in Liverpool, pltfs. obtained an injunction to prevent T. from receiving the freight:—Held: a part owner who is ship's husband has not the right as against other part owners of making an assignment of the whole freight to secure moneys advanced to him, the legal right to receive the freight was in the captain, & in the absence of any sufficient allegation & proof that he was about to misapply it, the injunction ought not to have been granted.—GUION v. TRASK (1860), 1 De G. Some years afterwards B. absconded, & C. was obliged to pay the debts of the firm, all of which had been contracted since the mtge., & a large balance thus became due to him:—Held: as the mtgee., when he took his security, knew that the firm was in possession of the property, he had constructive notice of the title of the partnership, & his claim must be postponed to that of C.; & the circumstance of the debts paid by C. having been incurred since the mtge. did not affect the case.—CAVANDER v. BULTEEL (1873), 9 Ch. 673. —— Mortgage of ship.]—A. & B. being in partnership & joint owners of a ship, A. requested C. & D. to accept two bills, amounting together to £2,600 on the security of the ship, which they agreed to do, & A. accordingly executed a bill of sale to them & the ship was registered in their names, A. agreeing that they might sell the ship, & indemnify themselves out of the proceeds, if he neglected to provide for the bills when due. A. became bkpt., & the bills were paid by C. & D., who thereupon assumed the ownership of the ship, writing specific directions to the captain in command of her at the Cape, as to procuring intermediate & homeward freight, & for his general govt. in the prosecution of a voyage to various parts of the Indian seas, & back to London; & these directions were from time to time renewed. The ship, on her arrival, became lessened in value, & C. & D. had been put to expense in her necessary disbursements:—Held: (1) C. & D. were not to be considered as mtgees., but as absolute owners of the ship; (2) the ship's expenses, therefore, after they assumed such ownership, must fall on them; & they could only prove for the balance of the £2,600 after deducting the value of the ship at the time they first took on themselves to act as owners; (3) the ship, being the partnership property of A. & B., & registered in the name of the partnership firm, was within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 32, & A. had therefore a right to deal with her as with any other partnership property, & consequently could sell or mtge. her, without a power of attorney from his partner B.—Re LITHERLAND, Ex p. HOWDEN (1842), 2 Mont. 676. Right of continuing or surviving partner—To mortgage partnership property—To secure partnership debt.]—The legal maxim "jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet" applies to prevent a right of survivorship in partnership chattels. The rule applies to manufacturers as well as merchants.

At law, the "jus disponendi" does not give the surviving partner the power to dispose of such part of the property of deceased partner as would rightly go to his exor., by way of mtge. for the payment or in satisfaction of the debts of the partnership.—BUCKLEY v. BARBER (1851), 6 Exch. 164; 20 L. 677. —— —— ——.]—(1) After the dissolution of a partnership between two sharebrokers one of them deposited with the bankers of the firm shares contracted to be purchased by the firm before dissolution with power to sell the shares in order to raise the requisite funds to complete the purchase:—Held: the power of sale was not an unauthorised delegation of the powers of a member of a dissolved firm but was valid & effectual. The authority of a partner continues after a dissolution for all purposes of winding up & if it be unduly exercised the remedy is by applying to the ct. for the appointment of a receiver.

In 1831, a policy of assurance, part of the partnership assets, was assigned by the continuing partner to a mtgee., with notice of the deed of dissolution. The retiring partner died, & the continuing partner became bkpt., whereupon partnership debts left unpaid by him were proved in a suit for the administration of the estate of deceased partner:—Held: (1) on the true construction of the whole deed, a lien was not intended to be created on the policy in respect of the unpaid partnership debts; (2) if it had been, still the mtgee. of the policy from the surviving partner was not bound to see to the application of the mtge. money, & was justified in supposing that it would be properly applied.—Re LANGMEAD'S TRUSTS (1855), 7 De G. 692. —— —— Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 31.]—The mtgee. or assignee of a share in a partnership is not bound by a sale subsequently made of the share by the mtgor. partner to his co-partners on a dissolution or by any agreement then made between the partners themselves purporting to alter the amount or value of the share as fixed by the arts. So long as the partnership continues, the mtgee. or assignee is precluded by above sect., sub-sect. 1, from interfering in the management or administration of the partnership or requiring accounts or inspecting the books, & he must accept the accounts of profits agreed to by the partners; but immediately upon a dissolution he becomes entitled, under sub-sect. 2, to have an account taken, as from the date of the dissolution, for the purpose of ascertaining & receiving the actual share of the mtgor. in the partnership assets, quite irrespective of any dealing with such share as between themselves.

One of two partners who were carrying on a business under a partnership deed mortgaged his share with the knowledge of his co-partner, & afterwards, without the mtgee.'s consent, agreed to a dissolution on the terms that he should sell his share to his co-partner for a sum which was less than the amount of the mtge. debt:—Held: the agreement was not binding upon the mtgee., & he was entitled, under above sect., sub-sect. 1, to an account, as from the date of the dissolution, for ascertaining the actual share of the mtgor.-partner in the partnership assets, & to payment of the amount of the share when so ascertained. —WATTS v. DRISCOLL, [1901] 1 Ch. 294; 70 L. 693. —— —— ——.]—A partnership deed between three partners contained a power for any two partners by notice to determine the partnership so far as the third partner was concerned if he did not keep up his capital. It also contained a clause providing for arbn. in the usual way "if any difference shall arise between the said partners or between one or more of them & the exors. or administrators of the others or other of them or between their respective exors., or administrators." Two of the partners had given notice to the third, & it was admitted that the partnership had been determined so far as he was concerned. Before this determination the outgoing partner had mortgaged his share. Questions had arisen as to the right of the continuing partners to purchase the outgoing partner's share & the amount of his interest in the goodwill, which depended on the construction of the partnership deed. The continuing partners gave notice to the outgoing partner that they had appointed an arbitrator & requiring him to do the same. He did this, & the arbitrators agreed on an umpire, but nothing more had been done in the arbn. The mtgees. brought this action against all three partners for an account of the outgoing partner's share from the date of dissolution. The continuing partners moved for a stay of proceedings under Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 4:—Held: (1) the right of the mtgees. to an account was an independent right, given by the Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), & not depending upon the partnership deed; (2) the arbn. clause not including in terms persons claiming under the partners, the mtgees. were not bound by the clause & would not be bound by any account taken in the arbn., & therefore their action for an account could not be stayed.—BONNIN v.

B. was one of the comrs. under an Act of Parliament for paving, etc., a township, who also had an account at the same bank, & were considerably in advance. The comrs. being desirous of a further advance, the manager of the bank wrote to B., offering to make it, on condition that he would not withdraw an equal amount of his account. B. wrote in reply, that he wished to have £5,000 advanced on those terms, adding, "I undertake not to remove my funds to the extent of this extra advance, until the same is repaid by the comrs."

The bank made the advance, & subsequently there was a balance on B.'s account of £4,876: the extra advance not having been paid:—Held: assuming that this was a partnership account, B., M., & co. could not recover the balance as money received for their use; & this defence was available under the general issue.—BROWNRIGG v. RAE (1850), 5 Exch. 489; 15 L. 708. —— Knowledge of lender.]—I cannot accede to [the principle] that if a partner for his own accommodation pledges the partnership as the money comes to the account of the single partner only, the partnership is not bound. I agree, if it is manifest to the persons advancing money, that it is upon the separate account, & so that it is against good faith that he should pledge the partnership, then they should show that he had authority to bind the partnership (LORD ELDON, C.).—Ex p. BONBONUS (1803), 8 Ves. 540; 32 E. 711. Right of pledgee to recover loss on advance—Against partner subsequently discovered.]—A. & B. trading under the firm of A. & co. agreed with C. to purchase coffee on a joint account, A. & co. to have the management of it. A. & co. purchased the coffee, & C. paid them for his share. A. & co. without the consent of C. deposited the coffee with D., who advanced money on it, & being ignorant that C. was concerned in it, debited A. & co. with the advance. purchases they were jointly interested; part was remitted to England; the bills of lading thereof, being indorsed in blank, were put into the hands of C. on account of the three firms. C. consigned such part to defts. for sale by them, who sold the same, & realised a net sum of £8,960 10*s.* 7*d.* C. previously to this consignment, had made other large consignments of corn for sale to them, being partly corn which they held as factors, & partly corn belonging to themselves. These cargos so consigned were sold by defts., who received their proceeds. C. drew upon defts., who accepted the bills & duly paid the same. The whole so paid exceeded the sum realised by sale of all the cargos consigned, including that which produced the £8,960 10*s.* 7*d.* Defts. having claimed a lien on this latter sum:—Held: there was no contract, express or implied, giving them any further lien, &, therefore, when all demands on the three firms jointly had been satisfied, those firms had a right to the proceeds, notwithstanding any separate debt due from any one of the consigning firms.

C. as managing partner, had a full right to deal with the partnership property in the ordinary course of trade. They had, therefore, a full right to consign it to defts., & thereby to give them a general lien on it against the consignee, that is to say, for all demands they might have jointly against the three consigning firms, but certainly not for a demand which they might have against any one of those firms separately. Any contract by C. to make the joint property a security for their separate debt, would have been a palpable fraud on their partners. C. as agents of the three firms, consigned the joint cargos for sale. Defts. effected the sales, & received the proceeds. Out of these proceeds they had a right to retain the amount of everything due to them from the consignors—that is to say, from the three firms.—but they had no further right (per CUR.).—DENNISTOUN v. YOUNG (1850), 15 L. 713. Money borrowed on bond—Whether mortgagor of share of partnership.]—A., B., C. & D. joined in a partnership to work a fulling mill. Money was subscribed by all the partners, with part of which, freehold land was bought, which was conveyed to A. & B. in fee; with other part a mill was built on the land, & machinery for the mill was purchased. By a partnership deed executed by A. & B., C. & D., the trusts of the land, mill, etc., were declared to be (among other things), that A. & B. should stand seised & possessed of all the estates, property goods, etc., upon trust for the benefit of themselves & their partners as part of their partnership joint stock-in-trade, there was a provision in the deed that A. & B. might borrow money upon mtge. of the stock, property estates, etc., belonging to the co-partnership; & it was declared that the land, mill, etc., should be deemed & considered as or in nature of personal estate & not real estate, & be held in trust for the partners as part of their partnership stock-in-trade. A. & B. under the powers of the deed, borrowed money for the purpose of the partnership, for which they gave bonds & notes in their own names, but did not mortgage any part of the property:—Held: (1) each partner had an interest in the realty corresponding with the amount of shares held by him in the partnership; (2) the money so borrowed had not the effect of mtges. on the shares of the partners.—BAXTER v. BROWN (1845), 7 Man. & G. 198; 135 E. 714. Power to pledge after dissolution—Partner appointed receiver—Action against pledgee—Parties to action.]—H., a partner in a firm of solrs., received money from R., a client, for the purpose of investment; but the money was not invested. On the death of another partner his exors. brought a partnership action, & H. was appointed one of the receivers. H., without the knowledge of his co-receiver, gave R. a memorandum, stating that he held the title deeds of certain property, on which the firm had an equitable mtge., on behalf of R. as security for her money, & he subsequently placed the deeds in a box marked with R.'s name. R. afterwards got possession of the box & deeds & claimed to retain them. H. was subsequently removed from the receivership & L. appointed in his place. The action was originally brought by the receivers against R. alone, but was amended by adding H. & the exors. of deceased partner as defts.:—Held: (1) all the partnership assets passed to the receivers by the order for their appointments to which H. was a party, &, therefore, he held the deeds as receiver & not as partner, & had no power to part with them, & consequently R. must deliver them up to the receivers; (2) the action was properly constituted by making the new receivers pltfs. & H. a deft.—HILLS v. REEVES (1882), 31 W. Bill of sale by one partner—"True owner."]—The words "true owner" in Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (c. 43), s. 5, are used in their natural & not in an artificial sense; & a man does not cease to be the true owner of personal chattels within the meaning of that sect. merely because they may be subject to some lien or equitable right. In 1885 the bkpts. commenced to carry on business in partnership, & in 1888 a bill of sale was executed by the elder partner, with the consent of the younger, of partnership property, as security for an advance for partnership purposes. This bill of sale was set aside by the county ct. judge on the ground that the grantor was not the "true owner" of either the whole of a moiety of the goods specified in the schedule, within Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (c. 43), s. 58, & an order was made directing the bill of sale holder to repay the value of the goods to the trustee in bkpcy.:—Held: the county ct. judge was wrong in ordering the bill of sale holder to pay back the whole of the money: the grantor was, to the extent of his share in the partnership goods assigned by the bill of sale, "true owner" within the meaning

740. On personal undertaking for firm.]—A., a member of the firm of A. Brothers, of South America, went to Hong Kong to enforce a debt due by B. & co. of that place to his firm. Upon B. & co. being threatened with proceedings, they applied to C. & co. for assistance. C. & co. agreed to advance B. & co. the money to pay their debt by remitting the amount to A. & co., & afterwards, in pursuance of this agreement, & in consideration of A.'s not proceeding to sue B. & co., gave an undertaking in writing, whereby C. & co. promised to remit the amount to A.'s agent in London, at the expiration of six months, whereon A. gave B. & co. a receipt in full for the debt due to the firm of A. & co. C. & co. afterwards repudiated their obligation to remit the amount to A. & co. In these circumstances A. brought an action against C. & co. in the Supreme Ct. at Hong Kong, & that Ct. nonsuited A. on the ground that A.'s firm, being beneficially interested, should have sued, & not A. alone.

Such judgment of nonsuit upon appeal reversed, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council holding, that the contract being entered into with A. personally, upon his undertaking not to sue B. & co., constituted a personal agreement ; & that A. was entitled to sue C. & co. in his own name, without joining his partners as pltfs. in the action. —AGACIO v. FORBES (1861), 14 Moo. 741. On contract for sale of partnership property—Signature for firm under power of attorney.]—C. & co., merchants in Spain, being possessed of mines in that country, gave J. a power of attorney authorising him to sell them for a sum not less than £40,000, J.'s remuneration being a moiety of any sum he might obtain beyond that price. J. contracted to sell the mines to defts., by an agreement which professed to be made "between J., acting for himself & also under a letter of attorney for & on behalf of A., B., & C., all three of them co-proprietors with him of various mines in Spain, & carrying on business in co-partnership with him under the style of C. & co.," of the one part, & defts. of the other part. In the body of the agreement C. & co. were described as the " vendors " & there was a stipulation that the mines were to be delivered by the vendors to the co. with a good title. The agreement was signed by J., " for self & partners," & was sealed with the seal of the co. :—Held : J.

764. —— —— ——.]—To assumpsit by A., B., & C. against D. for money had & received, D. pleaded that, before the money had been received, etc., pltfs. carried on the trade of founders in partnership; that, while they were such partners, A., with the privity & concurrence of B. & C., employed D., an auctioneer, to sell certain property belonging to the firm; that, at the time A. so employed D. to sell the said property, & at the time of the sale thereof, & at the time when the debt after mentioned became due from A. to D., D. believed that A. was the sole & exclusive owner of the property, & had full power & authority to sell the same, & to receive the proceeds for his own sole use, D. having no notice or knowledge that B. & C. had any right or interest in the property; that, after A. had so employed D., & before D. had any notice that A. was not sole & exclusive owner of the property, or of the proceeds thereof, A. became indebted to D. in a sum exceeding the moneys in the declaration mentioned, out of which D. was ready & willing to set off & allow the sums in the declaration mentioned. Pltfs. replied that, at the time of selling the property, D. had knowledge that A. was not the sole & exclusive owner of the property:—Held: the plea was bad, inasmuch as it did not allege that A. appeared as sole owner of the property with the assent or by the default of his partners; & therefore it was a mere attempt to set off a debt due from one partner against a debt due to the firm.—GORDON v. ELLIS (1846), 2 C. B. 821; 3 Dow. & L. 803; 15 L. J. C. P. 178; 7 L. T. O. S. 85; 10 Jur. 359; 135 E. R. 1167.

765. —— —— ——.]—S., a jobmaster, was indebted to a firm of corn merchants in the sum of £588 for corn supplied, & M., a partner in the firm, was indebted to S. in the sum of £290, being a private debt for the hire of carriages. S. bonâ fide believed, & had reasonable grounds to believe, that M. was the sole partner in the firm; whereas, in fact, B. was a secret partner in the business. In a settlement of the two accounts M. gave S. credit for the £290, & authorised the cashier of the firm to make an entry in the books to that effect:—Held: the £290 must be treated as a payment to the firm, & S. could not be called upon to pay it again, inasmuch as he was justified in believing that M. was the only partner in the business & was authorised to give S. credit for the amount of his account.—MUGGERIDGE'S v. SMITH & Co. (1884), 1 T. L. R. 166.

767. —— Set-off of money received by partner—Before partnership—On work continued by partnership.]—A. & B., as partners, sued defts. for work & labour done in the matter of an executorship:—Held: defts. could not set off money received by A. before the partnership on account of testator's estate, notwithstanding B. had at that time assisted A. in the matter of the executorship, & A., after the partnership, had admitted the receipt of the money.—FRANCE v. WHITE (1839), 6 Bing. 768. —— Set-off of gains of individual partners.]—In order to entitle a deft. in an action against him by partners for a breach of contract causing damage to the partnership, to take into account a benefit accruing to any of pltfs. from such breach, for the purpose of reducing the damages, such benefit must be a joint benefit accruing to the partnership, & it is immaterial for the assessment of damages whether or no individual pltfs. have actually benefited in other ways from the very default of the defts. for which as a partnership they are suing. Where partnerships sue for breach of contract, the damages must be confined to those sustained by the partnership; & part owners of ships are for the purposes of such an action in the same position as partners. Pltfs., as owners of an emigrant ship, were unable to carry their destined passengers through defts.' default. Many of the emigrants so lost to pltfs.' ship went consequently by another ship, of which also some of pltfs. were part owners:—Held: the true mode of assessing the damages to which pltfs. were entitled was to estimate the actual loss to them as owners of the ship delayed by defts.' breach of contract, & wholly to disregard any gain which those of them who were part owners of the second ship had in consequence made.—JEBSEN v. EAST & WEST INDIA DOCK CO. 769. Claim by partner—On contract authorised by co-partner—Set-off of personal debt.]—S., an attorney, practiced under the firm of "S. & C." C., although an attorney, was not, in fact, a partner of S., but only a clerk. Cass was a client of the nominal firm, & owed a bill of costs; & S. was personally liable to Cass on a bill of exchange of less amount than the bill of costs. S., without joining C., sued Cass for the amount of the bill of costs; & Cass pleaded never indebted, & set off the sum due on the bill of exchange. Cass brought a cross action on the bill of exchange, & S. set off the amount of the bill of costs. The two actions being tried together it was found by the jury that C. had authorised S. to contract on behalf of himself & C. with Cass, & that S. had so contracted:—Held: S. being the real principal, might take the benefit of the contract with Cass & sue alone, & set off the bill of costs in the action against him.—SPURR v. CASS, CASS v. SPURR (1870), L. joint & several; every partner is liable to pay the whole. In what proportion the others should contribute is a matter merely among themselves. A creditor knows with whom he dealt; but he does not know the secret partner. He may be nonsuited twenty times before he learns them all; or driven to a suit in equity, for a discovery who they are. It is cruel to turn a creditor round, & make him pay the whole costs of a nonsuit, in favour of a deft. who is certainly liable to pay his whole demand; & who is not injured by another partner's not being made deft., because, what he pays, he must have credit for, in his account with the partnership (LORD MANSFIELD).—RICE v. SHUTE (1770), 5 Burr. 2611; 2 Wm. 791. Death of partner after action commenced—Defence by survivor in personal capacity.]—An action was brought against a firm in the firm name. There were two partners, one of whom died after writ & appearance. The surviving partner put in a defence not purporting to be the defence of the firm, but as his personal defence to the action:—Held: the form of the defence was wrong, as deft., not being sued in his personal capacity, was not entitled to put in a personal defence, but only a statement of defence for & in the name of the firm.

In case, say, one partner alone chooses to appear, he would be entitled & would be bound to put in a statement of defence of the partnership. He might if he chose add, "by" so & so, "one of the partners served & appearing"; but his defence would be the defence of the firm, & the action would go to trial upon that defence, & in that case judgment could be obtained against the partnership. Of course, if the partner chose to put in an improper defence &, so rendered the partnership liable in a case where it ought not to be made liable, he might thereby, as between himself & his co-partners, be committing a breach of duty for which he would be liable to them, but, so far as pltf. is concerned, pltf. would be able to obtain judgment. Now, if judgment is obtained against the partnership, it can be enforced as against all the partners, & against the partnership assets; but there is this provision made, that suppose one of the partners has not been served & is ignorant of the existence of the action, then execution cannot be levied against him without giving him an opportunity of appearing, & pltf. must then satisfy the ct. that he is liable as a partner (ROMER, L.J.).

I have so far dealt with the case of the death of a partner before action. Now what happens if a partner dies between service of writ & the trial of the action & judgment? In that case equally the dead man's estate is not bound. Judgment can only be obtained against the surviving partners & enforced against them & against the partnership assets. . . . This is clear—that the partner who dies between writ & judgment is not before the ct., & therefore judgment could not be obtained against deceased partner, or execution enforced against him or his assets. Supposing there were two partners, both living at the date of writ, & both were served, & both died before the action came on for trial, no judgment could be obtained (ROMER, L.J.).—ELLIS v. WADESON, [1899] 1 Q. C. After Dissolution.

792. Action in firm name.]—(1) A firm, consisting of A., B., & C., incurred a debt. The firm was dissolved as to C., but continued to trade in the old firm's name. The creditor after the dissolution sued the firm in the firm's name, & served the writ personally on A., & on default of appearance signed judgment. C. had no notice of the action. The creditor, on discovering C., served him with particulars of demand of the judgment debt, & on his neglect to pay, issued a debtor's summons against him founded on the judgment debt. C. denied the debt & applied to dismiss the summons. The registrar refused:—Held: the debtor's summons must be dismissed, but without costs.

793. ——.]—Pltfs. having brought an action & obtained judgment against the firm of "H. & D.," applied to a judge under R. S. C., Ord. 42, r. 8, for leave to issue execution against M. as being a member of the firm. It appeared that the action was upon a bill of exchange drawn by D. at a time when M. H. & D. were partners in the firm of H. & D., but that M. had retired from the partnership prior to the issuing of the writ, & that the firm of H. & D. then continued, but consisted of H. & D. only. The bill was drawn without the knowledge or consent of M., & for a purpose unconnected with the partnership:—Held: (1) under R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 10, which enables two or more persons being liable as co-partners to be sued in the name of their firm, the right to sue partners in the name of a firm is not limited to the case of partners carrying on business at the date of the writ; (2) it was a question of fact, having regard to the circumstances & the proceedings subsequent to the writ, whether pltf. intended to sue under the firm name those partners only who were members of the firm at the commencement of the action, or the same persons together with any former partner.—DAVIS v. MORRIS (1883), 10 Q. The notice not having been complied with, the judgment creditor presented a petition against J. alone:—Held: under R. S. C., Ord. 48A, the action had been properly constituted against "W. F. was not in fact, however, a partner in the firm, nor did he in any way represent either it or G. for the purposes of service. The firm entered a conditional appearance in their firm name, & moved to discharge the service as a against them. G., who was out of the jurisdiction, also entered a conditional appearance & moved to discharge the service as against him:—Held: (1) the defect, under R. S. C., Ord. 12, r. 15, in the firm's conditional appearance could be cured by an undertaking by the partners to amend the appearance by appearing individually in their own names; (2) upon this being done the service must be discharged as against them, & it must also be discharged as against G., he being accessible without difficulty, & there being no need for prompt service; (3) pltf. must pay the costs of both motions, the objection as to the firm's defective appearance not having been taken until nearly the close of the argument.—NELSON v. PASTORINO & Co. S. C., Ord. 48A, r. 8, must have served him with the writ in accordance with the proviso to r. 3.—WIGRAM v. COX, SONS, BUCKLEY & Co., [1894] 1 Q. B. 792; 63 L. J. Q. Subsequently, D., a creditor, without the knowledge of these proceedings sued the firm in the K. B. Div. on certain bills of exchange accepted by the firm for partnership purposes, & served one partner only, who entered an appearance, & obtained judgment for the sum due & costs. D. then having become aware of this action applied in it for leave to issue execution, notwithstanding the possession of the receiver, which leave was accordingly granted, & a charging order obtained. On a motion on behalf of the partner not served with the writ in the action in the K. B. Div. to discharge the charging order for irregularity:—Held: the motion was, in effect, to obtain a declaration that the judgment of the K. B. Div. was void, & there was no jurisdiction to so hold; R. S. C., Ord. 48A, rr. 1 & 3, were intended for the protection of the individual partner, & not of the assets of the firm, therefore the order previously made in chambers following the terms of the order in Kewney v. Attrill, No. 1540, post, would stand, & the motion be refused with costs.—BRAND v. SANDGROUND (1901), 85 L. 819. Service on agent—Agent transmitting orders only.]—R. S. C., Ord. 48A, r. 1, provides that persons liable as co-partners & carrying on business within the jurisdiction may be sued in their firm name, & r. 3 of the same Ord. provides for service of the writ in such cases at the principal place within the jurisdiction of the business of the partnership upon any person having the management of the business there.

Defts. were a firm of manufacturers carrying on business in Glasgow, all the members of which were domiciled & resident in Scotland. They employed an agent in London to procure orders for them on commission. For that purpose he occupied an office in London, the rent of which he paid himself, & at which he kept samples of defts.' goods. His duty was to receive & transmit orders to defts. at Glasgow, & he had no authority to conclude contracts for defts., except upon express instructions. A writ was issued against defts. in the name of their firm, & served upon the agent at the above-mentioned office:—Held: defts. did not carry on business, & had no place of business, within the jurisdiction, & therefore the writ & service must be set aside.—GRANT v. ANDERSON & CO., [1892] 1 Q. 822. —— ——.] —Pltfs., an English firm, entered into contracts in India with G. & co., an Indian firm, for the manufacture of indigo. O. & co. were the English correspondents of G. & co. & there were some partners common to both firms, & some of the partners of each firm were resident in India. G. & co. consigned indigo to O. & co., & pltfs. brought an action against the firm of O. & co. claiming the indigo, to which all the members of O. & co. both in England & India appeared. Pltfs. then obtained an order ex p. to amend their writ by adding G. & co. as defts. & making consequential alterations in the writ, & also obtained leave to serve the amended writ on defts. out of the jurisdiction. In making the amendments, pltfs. made the firm of G. & co. deft., & added a claim in respect of fresh causes of action arising out of breaches of contract by G. & co. in India, which were not included in the original writ. The members of the firm of G. & co. appeared to the amended writ, & moved to discharge the order to amend as irregular :—Held : the original writ was wrongly issued against the firm of O. & co., some of the partners being out of the jurisdiction & the order to amend it was also bad. The ct. accordingly set aside the amended writ, & gave liberty to pltfs. to amend the original writ by substituting for the name of the firm of O. & co. the names of the individual members of that firm & of the firm of G. & co. who were in this country, & by adding a claim in respect of breaches of the contracts ; the members of the two firms who were out of the jurisdiction being at liberty to set aside their appearances, without prejudice to any application by pltfs. to add such members as parties, & to serve them with the amended writ.—INDIGO Co. v. OGILVY, [1891] 2 Ch. 31 ; 64 L. 823. —— ——.] —A writ was issued, under R. S. C., Ord. 48A, r. 1, against a firm in the firm name. The firm was a foreign firm carrying on business abroad, but the members of the firm were British subjects. They employed pltf. to purchase goods in England for shipment to them abroad, & one of the partners was generally in England & chose the goods to be purchased. Pltf. ordered & paid for these goods in his own name & forwarded the same to deft. firm abroad, & he received from defts. sums of money on account from time to time, leaving a balance for which the writ was issued. The writ having been served personally on one of the partners while in England :—Held : upon the facts, deft. firm did not carry on a business within the jurisdiction & consequently there was no authority for issuing the writ against the firm in the firm name, & the issue & service of the writ ought to be set aside.—SINGLETON v. ROBERTS, STOCKS & Co. 824. —— On partner visiting England. A writ was issued against a partnership firm, sued by the firm name, which carried on business abroad & had no place of business in England, & all the partners in which were domiciled & resident abroad. The writ was served in England upon a person who was temporarily there, & whom pltfs. alleged to be a partner in the firm, he being served expressly "as partner." He entered a conditional appearance, which was, on the application of pltfs., struck out as irregular, & he then entered an unconditional appearance, &, in his own name, moved to set aside the service, on the ground that he was not a partner in deft. firm. A Div. Ct. refused to set aside the service :—Held : R. S. C., Ord. 9, r. 6, did not apply to the case of a foreign firm, & the service was not good service on the firm ; but the service on deft. as an individual would have been good, if he had been named in the writ, & he had by appearing waived the irregularity.

Ordered therefore, that, if pltfs. would elect to amend the writ, by stating that applt. was sued together with the other alleged members of the firm, who were to be named separately, the service should stand as against applt. ; but, if pltfs. would not so elect, the writ must be set aside with costs.—WESTERN NATIONAL BANK OF CITY OF NEW YORK v. PEREZ, TRIANA & Co., [1891] 1 Q. The writ asked for cancellation of an agreement, & was served upon R. in England. Liberty to issue a concurrent writ & serve notice of it out of the jurisdiction on Mayer Frères & co. was granted, & they were duly served in Paris at the principal place of business of the firm:—Held: the proceedings must be set aside, so far as they affected Mayer Frères & co., on the ground that there was no power to sue a foreign partnership, not carrying on business in England, under its firm name, in the absence of evidence that by French law a partnership was a different legal entity from the individual partners.—VON HELLFELD v. RECHNITZER & MAYER FRÈRES & CO., [1914] 1 Ch. 748; 83 L. 859. —— ——.]—Pltfs., a firm of printers, sued deft. for the cost of printing for him a certain newspaper of which they supposed him to be the sole proprietor. There being no defence to the action, deft. consented to final judgment being signed against him. After judgment had been so signed, pltfs. received information that at the time the work was done, T. was a partner of deft., & joint proprietor with him of the newspaper. They accordingly, with the consent of deft., applied for an order that the judgment should be set aside, & that the writ should be amended by adding T. as deft. in the action:—Held: the consent of deft. to the setting aside of the judgment could not enable pltf. to evade the rule that judgment recovered against one of two joint contractors is a bar to an action against the other, & there was consequently no jurisdiction to make the order.—HAMMOND v. SCHOFIELD, [1891] 1 Q. At a sale by auction by the sheriff, deft himself bought the interest for a sum very much below its actual value, & an assignment of the interest was executed by the sheriff to deft. The purchase-money was paid to the sheriff by a cheque drawn by deft. on the partnership banking account, & the amount was debited to pltf. in the partnership books. Pltf. on recovering his health brought an action to set aside the sale on the ground of undervalue & undue advantage, for a declaration that the partnership was still subsisting, for a dissolution, & for the usual accounts:—Held: (1) the purchase was void & must be set aside; (2) under the circumstances of the present case there was no dissolution of the partnership by the seizure & sale. Qu.: whether a sale by a sheriff of a partner's interest to his co-partner causes a dissolution, if the co-partner purchases with his own money.

One partner died, & his share in the business was ascertained in suits instituted for that purpose & for the administration of his estate, to be £64,000, & the instalments were directed to be paid by the surviving partners, & the survivors & survivor of them, until further order. 896. Partner must not place himself in position antagonistic to firm.]—If an indenture of partnership for a term of years contains a proviso, that either party may, if he be desirous of quitting the trade, determine the partnership by giving six months' notice, he cannot dissolve the partnership & then set up a trade elsewhere; but must either continue the partnership, or entirely give up such trade.—COOPER v. WATLINGTON (1784), 2 Chit. 451; sub nom. COOPER v. WATSON, 3 Doug. All the partners in a publication, except one, being also partners in a rival publication, an injunction to restrain the using of the effects of the former partnership, to assist the latter, in consideration of an annual sum, was refused, where there had been an agreement, permitting the use on those terms, which had been acted on for many years. But the injunction was granted to restrain the use of partnership effects, not included in the agreement.—GLASSINGTON v. THWAITES (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 124; 1 L. J. O. S. Ch. 113; 57 E. R. 50.

903. Cessation of duty—One partner failing to carry out his obligation.]—A. & B. entered into a joint adventure for the purchase of goods to be shipped to China, to be there sold, & the proceeds of the sale invested in a homeward cargo. A. was to render himself liable for the payment of the goods purchased, & B. was to supply A. with a share of the money by a fixed time, so as to enable A. to meet this liability. At the time fixed A. applied to B. for the money, but B. failed to supply it. In consequence of this, & after some negotiation on the subject, A. offered to allow B. to withdraw from the adventure altogether, & this offer was ultimately accepted. Down to the time when A. applied to B. for the money, A. had communicated to B. all the information which he possessed relative to the adventure & to its chances of success, which then appeared very doubtful, but while the negotiation was going on A. received two letters from his correspondents in China, through whom the business was managed, the contents of which he did not communicate to B.:—Held: considering the relative situation of the parties, there was no obligation on the part of A. to communicate to B. the letters in question; & that, there being no proof of misrepresentation by A., the arrangement could not be set aside merely on the ground of the noncommunication of the letters.—M'LURE v. RIPLEY (1850), 2 Mac. & G. 274; 42 E. SUB-SECT. 2.—DUTY TO ACCOUNT FOR PROFIT RECEIVED.

A. In General.

See Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), ss. 28, 29.

904. Partner must account—Profits of offices obtained—In breach of covenant to procure for firm.]—A. & B. & the son of B. entered into partnership as solrs., & by arts. agreed, clause 2, that the partners were diligently & faithfully to employ themselves in carrying on & managing all the professional business in which they or either of them might be employed or concerned; clause 5, that B. should use his best endeavours to obtain the appointment of the partnership firm to three offices or clerkships, which were then held by B., & such offices should be partnership appointments; clause 6, that all other compatible offices should be obtained, if possible, in the name of the firm, & the emoluments treated as part of the profits of the partnership; clause 15, that, if B. or his son should retire, or A. or B. or his son should die, the share of deceased partner should accrue to the surviving partners: that if B. or his son retired they were to use their best endeavours to secure the practice to the continuing partners, & such retiring partner should not practise within 30 miles; clause 16, that, if either partner should not diligently & faithfully employ himself in carrying on the partnership practice, & should, on receiving moneys, bills, notes, etc., knowingly or wilfully omit immediately to make entries thereof, or if A. or the son of B. should absent himself more than two months in one year, the others or other of the partners, if they or he should think fit, should be at liberty to dissolve the partnership, by giving to the offending partner a notice to that effect, & the partnership should from that time, or the time specified in the notice, be dissolved in the same manner & with the same consequences as if it had determined by the voluntary retirement of the offending partner. B. & his son subsequently procured their own appointment, or the appointment of one of them, to the offices or clerkships, & did not endeavour to procure the appointment of A. It was afterwards discovered that B. was greatly involved in debt, & he absconded in Jan. 1849, & did not return to the business. In May, 1849, A. served a notice, in the manner pointed out by the articles, on B. & his son to dissolve the partnership from that date; & he then filed his bill against B. & his son to have the dissolution declared by the ct., an injunction to restrain them from practising within 30 miles, & a decree that they should resign the several offices or clerkships: —Held: (1) pltf. was entitled to dissolve the partnership as to B., but not as against the other partner, the son of B., & he was not entitled to dissolve it by notice under clause 16 without the concurrence of his co-partner, the son; (2) B., not having procured or endeavoured to procure for the partnership firm the appointments to the several offices or clerkships, so as to give pltf. at the dissolution either a share of the profits of the offices or the chance of competing for them, but such appointments having been procured for B. & his son to the exclusion of pltf., B. & his son were not to be allowed to retain the offices for their exclusive benefit.

(3) Inasmuch as, from the nature of the offices, they could not be sold, nor could any manager or receiver be appointed to carry them on, defts. ought to be charged with the value of the offices in the partnership accounts.

(4) Pltf. having given a notice of dissolution, acting under the clause 16, & his co-partner having adopted it, the partnership should be treated as dissolved from the time of the notice, although not with the consequences attaching to a dissolution under clause 15.

908. Liability of person inducing breach of duty.]—A. usually employed B. as his agent to buy hops of the several planters in & about Canterbury, but having in a particular season omitted to give him any orders at the usual time, B. enters into a partnership with three others, for purchasing hops of that year, for their mutual benefit. The hops are accordingly purchased, but A. having intelligence of this transaction before they were delivered, prevails upon B. to declare to the planters, that he bought them as A.'s agent, & by that means A. got the hops delivered to him:—Held: this was a fraud upon the partners of B. & A. should account for the value of the hops, according to the highest price for which he sold them.—HUNTER v. SHEPPARD (1769), 4 Bro. A member of a firm of shipbrokers styled "H. C. & co.," assisted in the formation of a joint-stock co. for building ships, & in so doing availed himself of information obtained as a member of the firm, & occasionally used the name & office paper of the firm in his correspondence on that subject. He received remuneration for his services in the formation of the co., & was made a director of the co., when formed, at a salary. He also threatened to engage in the separate business of a shipowner under the style of "H. C. & co., shipowning." The other partners brought an action to restrain him from using the name of the firm in a separate business, & claiming an account of his profits & salary in connection with the new co.:—Held: (2) deft. must be restrained from using the name of H. Applts., apart from resp., purchased some other of the co.'s stands & made profits.

In a suit by resp. for an account thereof the ct. below held that, though the stands so purchased were not within the scope of the partnership of 1902, they were connected with it indirectly; that the purchase thereof by applts. was secret & injurious to the common interest, & that resp. was entitled to share in the benefit thereof:—Held: it could not be supported on authority or on any recognised equity.

The purchase, not being within the scope of the partnership, was not shown to have been in rivalry or any other connection therewith, nor in any way injurious thereto.—TRIMBLE v. GOLDBERG, [1906] A. C. 494; 75 L. J. P. C. 92; 95 L. T. 163; 22 T. L. R. 717, P. C.

SUB-SECT. 3.—LEASEHOLD INTERESTS AND REVERSIONS ACQUIRED BY PARTNER.

917. Renewal of lease—Enures for benefit of partnership.]—(1) A partnership, without arts., & for an indefinite period, may be dissolved by any partner at any time, without previous notice; subject to the engagements of the partnership: but the existence of engagements with third persons cannot prevent the right of dissolution as among themselves.

(2) The consequence of the dissolution of partnership, where there are no arts., prescribing the terms, is a general sale & account of the joint property: one or more partners therefore cannot insist on taking the share of another at a valuation; or, that he shall remove his proportion from the premises; thereby securing the goodwill.

(3) Partner, after dissolution of the partnership continuing to trade with the joint property, must account for the profits.

(4) Lease of premises, where a partnership trade was carried on, renewed by one partner in his own name clandestinely, a trust for the partnership; to be accounted for as joint property.

(5) No partner therefore can derive a particular advantage by choosing an unseasonable moment for dissolution. . . . The same inquiry should be directed as in Crawshay v. Collins, No. 1010, post, to ascertain, what that stock was at the period of dissolution . . . what use was afterwards made of it; & what profits were produced by the trade (GRANT, M.R.).—FEATHERSTONHAUGH v. FENWICK (1810), 17 Ves. 298; 34 E. .]—There is no authority for the general proposition that if a person only partly interested in an old lease obtains from the lessor a renewal, he must be held a constructive trustee of the new lease, whatever may be the nature of his interest or the circumstances under which he obtained the new lease. A person renewing is only held to be a constructive trustee of the new lease if, in respect of the old lease, he occupied some special position by virtue of which he owed a duty towards the other persons interested : as, for example, in the case of a renewal by a tenant for life of settled leaseholds, or by a partner of a partnership lease, or by a mtgee. of a mortgaged lease. In all such cases the new lease is treated as engrafted on or as forming part of the original lease.—Re BISS, BISS v. BISS, [1903] 2 Ch. 40 ; 72 L. J. Ch. 473 ; 88 L. T. 403 ; 51 W. 919. —— —— Person renewing constructive trustee—If lease renewable.]—W. W. was possessed in 1854 of certain leasehold premises, partly under two leases of 1839 & 1840, & partly under a yearly tenancy. On these premises he was carrying on certain businesses, one of which he made over to a partnership. No lease of the premises was ever granted to the partnership. W. W. purchased by auction in 1881 one moiety of the reversion expectant on the two leases & the yearly tenancy. He died in 1883, leaving J. R. & T. A. W. his exors., who purchased the other moiety of the reversion in 1893.

This was an action by partners entitled to one-fourth share of the partnership claiming a declaration that the reversion formed part of the partnership assets :—Held : (1) the purchase of the reversion did not enure for the benefit of the partnership assets, the leaseholds not being renewable by custom or contract ; (2) the firm having no interest in fact in the leasehold premises, there was nothing even if the reversion could be treated as a graft or an addition, to which it could be grafted, & pltfs.' claim failed on this ground also.

If a trustee, or a person in the position of a trustee, holding a lease as part of his trust property takes a renewal of that lease, that renewed lease is treated as a graft or addition to the trust property, & itself forms part of the trust property (WARRINGTON, J.).—BEVAN v. WEBB, [1905] 1 Ch. 620 ; 74 L. 920. —— Right of one partner to renew -- Business to be carried on in agreed place.]—C. & N. entered into partnership for twenty-one years as ironmongers under articles which provided that the business should be carried on for twenty-one years at the G. R. premises, or in such other place or places as the partners may agree upon. Afterwards the partners agreed to add to their business that of ironfounders, & took for that purpose the G. Q. works. The lease of these works expired during the partnership, & C. declined to concur in a renewed lease. N. thereupon took a renewed lease of them in his own name, & insisted on his right to continue to carry on the ironfounding business there on account of the partnership :—Held : (1) as the partnership business could only be carried on in such place as the partners agreed upon, if they did not agree upon a place it could not be carried on at all, & one partner, in the absence of express powers for that purpose, could not without the consent of the other, although the partnership was to continue for a definite term, renew on account of the partnership a lease of the property on which the business had been carried on.

(2) C. was entitled to an injunction to restrain N. from employing the assets or pledging the credit of the partnership in carrying on business at the G. Q. works.—CLEMENTS v. NORRIS (1878), 8 Ch. D. 129 ; 47 L. J. Ch. 546 ; 38 L. T. 591, C. A.

that it is essential to the validity of their acts that the voice of the minority should have been heard; & such exclusion of directors was restrained.

Upon every principle governing not only bodies of this kind but governing private partnerships where there is a body of persons in which the majority is to bind the minority it is essential to the validity of all their acts that the voice of the minority should be heard, & that the minority should have an opportunity of stating their views; and it is not till they have had that opportunity that the acts of the majority become binding on the minority: & I think Lord Eldon's opinion may be referred to as showing that even if the minority had a voice given to them, still, if there existed a combination among the majority, before that voice was heard to overbear it he would consider the acts of such a body illegal (SIR JAMES PARKER, V.-C.).—GREAT WESTERN RY. 925. Limitation on power—Sale of partnership business.]—Partnership amongst a number of persons, to be managed by a committee of five, & by general meetings, at which the vote of the majority was to be binding; with a provision, that any one wishing to retire should first offer his share to the committee at a certain price, & if they declined to buy, might sell it to any other person: —Held: the majority were not able to sell the whole concern without the consent of all; but where all but two were desirous of retiring, they might sell their own shares without making an offer of them to the committee.—CHAPPLE v. CADELL (1822), Jac. 537; 37 E. R. 953, L. C.

926. —— Commencement of different business.] —If six persons join in a partnership of life assurance, it seems clear that neither the majority, nor any select part of them, nor five out of the six, can engage that partnership in marine insurances, unless the contract of partnership, expressly, or impliedly, gives that power.

Qu.: if a part of the six openly & publicly profess their intention to engage the partnership in another concern, & clearly & distinctly bring this to the knowledge of one or more of the other partners, & such one or more of the other partners can be clearly shown to have acquiesced in such intention, & to have permitted the other partners to enter upon & engage themselves & the body in such new projects.

The principles, which a ct. would act upon, in the case of a partnership of six, must, as far as the nature of things will admit, be applied to a partnership of 600. They, who seek to embark a partner in a business not originally part of the partnership concern, must make out clearly that he did expressly, or tacitly, acquiesce.—NATUSCH v. IRVING (1824), 2 Coop. temp. Cott. 358; 47 E. 927. —— Authorising manager to sign cheques.] —The manager of a firm is not entitled, as such, to sign the firm or name of the partnership:—Held: the authority of trustees representing three-fourths of the property of the concern was insufficient to empower a manager, as such, to sign the co.'s firm, especially when the proceeding was opposed by the representative of the remaining fourth.—BEVERIDGE v. BEVERIDGE (1872), L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. 183, H. L.

928. What power includes — Admission of new partners.]—In a partnership consisting of three members, two of the partners resolved to introduce into the partnership works a son of one of these partners, with a view to his learning the business. The third partner objected to this being done:—Held: the difference between the partners was as to an ordinary matter connected with the partnership business, within Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 24 (8), on which, therefore, the decision of the majority was binding.—HIGHLEY v. WALKER (1910), 26 T. They afterwards purchased other estates, the purchase-money of which was by the conveyances, expressed to be paid by the three partners in equal proportions. The partners subsequently executed a deed, reciting the fact that the purchase-money had been wholly paid by two of the partners, & declaring that, until the third partner should pay into the partnership capital a sum equal to that paid by each of the other partners, he should stand possessed of the undivided third part of the estates in trust for them, the other two partners. He carried on the business very successfully for more than eighteen months & then purchased it with the sanction of the ct. He was a skilled mechanic, & during his receivership worked in the business as a common workman. In his accounts he claimed to be allowed two premiums of £25 each paid to a guarantee society which had become surety for his duly accounting, & the sum of £2 per week for the manual work done by him as a workman:—Held: the £2 per week ought also to be allowed for that, although the receiver had acted irregularly & run great risk in not asking for wages at the time of his appointment he was entitled to be paid for services which had proved beneficial to the estate & which it was no part of his duty as receiver & manager to perform.—HARRIS v. SLEEP, [1897] 2 Ch. 80; 66 L. They ought to have agreed for an allowance; the ct. can make none. The accounts having been annually balanced without such allowance, is conclusive.—THORNTON v. PROCTOR (1792), 1 Anst. 94; 145 E. 951. Entry subject to terms of partnership—No special term without notice.]—If two partners take in a third partner, without specifying the terms on which he becomes such partner, he has the same rights & is subject to the same liabilities as the two original partners; the terms & conditions of the partnership which bind them bind him, unless a new contract be made between them. & so also, if the conditions of his becoming partner are partially set forth, then to the extent that they are not specified & involved by necessary inference therein, he will be bound by the terms of the partnership contract affecting the two original partners with whom he associates himself.

In 1839 a retiring partner stipulated with the continuing partners that they should, at a future period, take his grandson T. into the business. In 1846 the continuing partners entered into arts. for seven years, & by one clause, which formed no part of the partnership contract prior to that time, it was stipulated that any partner might retire, & the continuing partners should then pay him the value of his share in the "goodwill." Afterwards, in 1849, T. was admitted, but the memorandum arranging his admission specified little more than the share he was to take, & it was agreed that it should not annul the arts. of 1846 as between the former partners. T. had no notice of the stipulation as to retirement:—Held: T. was not bound by it, though the former partners were; & assuming that under it, the value of the goodwill was to be calculated as a perpetuity, still the arrangements of 1849 had cut it down & limited it to so much of the seven years as were unexpired at the time of the notice to retire.—AUSTEN v. BOYS (1857), 24 Beav. 598; 27 L. SUB-SECT. 2.—STIPULATION EMPOWERING PARTNER TO NOMINATE.

953. Exercise of power entrusted to executors—Power to exclude nominee—Executors must be unanimous.]—Testator, after giving life interests in stock to each of his daughters, afterwards the principal among his grandchildren, in pursuance of a power in arts. of partnership appointed his exors. to carry on the trade in his room with power to dissolve, or nominate any other person; & gave them his share of the capital & all freehold & leasehold on trust to carry on the trade as long as they should think fit; & after expiration of partnership to sell the estates, & with the produce & profits of trade & all the rest of his estate from a fund to accumulate twelve years, then among the grandchildren living: By codicil he substituted his partner, who was his son in law, in the room of one exor. removed; & desired, that, if his exors. should continue trade, & his grandsons T. & J. should attain twenty-one, his exors. would nominate each a partner for a quarter, when exors. should think fit, with legacies at the same time, to sink into the estate if they should decline the partnership, or die before twenty-one; exors. to advance any farther sum they might want to carry on trade; the rest of his property among all the grandchildren except T. & J. By another codicil he left it entirely in discretion of the exors. to appoint J. or not; if they should not think proper, his legacy to be void: T. & J. both entitled to be partners & to their legacies at twenty-one; one exor., their father, being for admitting them, the two other against it: but if all had without fraud united in declaring J. unfit, they might have excluded him; in which case he could have taken nothing under this devise.—WAINWRIGHT v. WATERMAN (1791), 1 Ves. 311: 30 E. R. 300.

954. Obligation on other partners to admit.]—LOVEGROVE v. NELSON, No. 948, ante.

955. —— Nominee performing conditions of admission.]—Where, in partnership arts., it has been agreed between the partners that any one of them shall be at liberty to nominate & introduce any other person into the partnership, & a valid nomination is made by one partner accordingly, followed by acceptance of the nomination by the nominee, the other partners are bound to give effect to the nomination, &, in case of their refusal to admit the nominee as partner or to do & execute the acts & deeds necessary for conferring upon him the rights of a partner, he is entitled, as against them, to such relief as cts. of equity are in the habit of granting to persons standing in the relation of partners, subject to his fulfilling, on his part, such conditions of his admission as may be contained in the arts., such as executing a proper deed, or otherwise.—BYRNE v. REID, [1902] 2 Ch. 735; 71 L. 956. Extent of power.]—By arts. of partnership it was agreed that, except as thereinafter provided, none of the partners should hire any clerk or servant in the business, but T., one of the partners, might introduce two of his sons as pupils or clerks, at a salary, such sons to have an option of becoming partners. T. introduced two sons, the second of whom died without becoming a partner:—Held: (1) T. could not introduce or employ a third son as pupil or clerk; (2) an action to restrain breach of a partnership covenant would lie, though pltf. did not pray for a dissolution.—WATNEY v. TRIST (1876), 45 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—OPTION TO ENTER PARTNERSHIP.

A. In General.

957. Whether creating trust of share—In favour of nominee.]—A tradesman bequeathed his residuary estate, including his stock-in-trade, to trustees, with a direction to convert into money all such parts as should not consist of leaseholds or money in the funds; & to invest the same & pay the annual income to S., his wife; & after her decease to M., his wife's sister; & after the decease of the survivor of S. & M. he gave his residuary estate to another person absolutely. After the date of the will M. married, & her husband & testator entered into partnership, under arts. which contained a proviso that if testator should die during the partnership, leaving a widow surviving, such widow might, if she should think fit, continue to carry on the partnership business with the surviving partner, & should be entitled to testator's share in the profits & excess of capital; & if testator should leave no widow, or his widow should not desire to enter into the business, or if the other partner should die during the partnership, the surviving partner to take upon himself the partnership business & property, accounting & paying for the same as therein directed. Testator died, leaving his widow, who, under this provision, claimed his interest in the partnership: —Held: the provision in the arts. took testator's share of the business wholly out of the provisions of the will, & the widow became entitled, under the partnership arts., to such share.

A trust may well be created in the absence of any expression importing confidence; & the obligation on the surviving partner created by the partnership arts., with reference to the legal interest in the partnership, did not in substance differ from a trust, & therefore the arts of partnership created a trust in favour of the wife, to arise on the death of testator leaving a widow surviving, which would attach on the property as it should then exist.—PAGE v. COX (1852), 10 Hare, 163; 68 E. R. 882.

B. Nature of Option.

959. Not compulsory on nominee.]—By partnership arts., it was stipulated, that the partnership should continue for nineteen years, & that if either of the partners should die, during the term, the widow, or other legal personal representative of the partner so dying, should be let into the partnership, & become a partner therein, in the same manner, & upon the same terms & conditions: Held: (1) this was not an absolute, or imperative obligation on the widow or personal representative to become a partner, but only an option so to do, with a stipulation by the surviving partner to admit them. (2) The widow, or personal representative, was entitled to a reasonable time to inspect & examine the partnership accounts, but not to have the accounts taken, before they elected whether they would become partners.—PIGOTT v. BAGLEY (1825), M'Cle & Yo. 569; 148 E. R. 539, Ex. Ch.

960. ——.]—(1) Difficulties in appointing a receiver of a partnership upon motion.

Surviving partners insisted on continuing the partnership with the assets of a deceased partner. The ct. thought the representatives of the latter entitled to a receiver.

(2) Partnership stipulation, that a son of one partner, or in case of his minority, the exor. should, on the death of such partner, succeed to his share. The ct., on the terms of the partnership deed, considered it an option, & not an obligation.—MADGWICK v. WIMBLE (1843), 6 Beav. 495; 14 L. J. Ch. 387; 7 Jur. 661; 49 E. R. 917.

961. —— Nominee refusing to become partner—Partnership treated as dissolved.]—Where a partner has a right to appoint a person to succeed, upon his death, to his share of the business, & the person so appointed refuses to accept that share, or to comply with the stipulations of the arts., the partnership is dissolved; but the dissolution is not a dissolution which is wrought by the exclusion of the appointee by the surviving partners.—KERSHAW v. MATTHEWS (1826), 2 Russ. 62; 38 E. R. 259, L. C.

Annotations:—Folld. Lancaster v. Allsup (1887), 57 L. T. 53. Refd. Downs v. Collins (1848), 12 L. T. O. S. 102.

962. —— —— —— Remedy against deceased partner's estate.]—(1) The arts. of partnership under which a partnership in a brewery had been carried on, provided for the introduction of a son or sons, brother or brothers, nephew or nephews of either partner, & power was given for one partner to introduce such relations by his last will, but they were silent as to any power of bequeathing his share of the business, but stipulated that the same, on the death of a partner, should be carried on by the survivor & the exors. or administrators of the partner dying, in the way therein expressed. One partner died; his representatives declined to join in carrying on the business, & other parties claiming under deceased partner's will joined in the general allegation that to carry on the business would not be beneficial for any party:—Held: the partnership was dissolved on the death of the deceased partner.

(2) A man may do certain acts, & he may covenant that his son, after his death shall also do certain acts; or if it be his wife, that she may levy a fine, for instance; but those parties cannot afterwards be compelled to do it, but the covenantee looks to the assets of the covenantor. If the person who is required to do the act declines to do it, the effect of that latter clause about the death afterwards is material in this point of view, that it gives the exors. who filed a fiduciary character power, if they think fit, to carry on the business, which of course would be an indemnity to them for their so doing (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—DOWNS v. COLLINS (1848), 6 Hare, 418; 12 L. T. O. S. 102; 67 E. R. 1228.

Annotations:—As to (1) Folld. Lancaster v. Allsup (1887), 57 L. T. 53. Refd. Johnston v. Moore (1858), 6 W. R. 490. As to (2) Consd. Lancaster v. Allsup (1887), 57 L. T. 53.

963. —— —— —— ——.]—Partnership arts. provided that the partnership should last for a term of fifteen years, & that in case any of the partners should die during the continuance of the partnership, his exors. or administrators should succeed to his share, & be & become partners in his place, & in respect of his share:—Held: the ct. would not, on the death of a partner force the exors. to become partners against their will; &, if they declined to come in, the partnership must be treated as dissolved as from the death of the deceased partner, & wound up on that footing; but the judgment must contain a provision, as in Downs v. Collins, No. 962, ante, reserving to the surviving partners the right to prosecute against the estate of the deceased any remedy which they might have in respect of any alleged breach of the covenant contained in the arts.—LANCASTER v. ALLSUP (1887), 57 L. T. 53.

C. Time for Exercise of Option.

964. Within reasonable time—Time for inspection of books.]—PIGOTT v. BAGLEY, No. 959, ante.

965. —— Effect of delay.]—A partner destined his two sons to be taken into the partnership business, but one of them only availed himself of the intention, & entered into the partnership. There was an understanding that on the death of a partner the interest should be continued in his family. The son who had entered the concern having died leaving several sons, & leaving his brother exor. & trustee under his will, the brother nominated his own son to the business to the exclusion of his nephews. On bill filed by the widow of deceased partner praying that the brother might be ordered to account for the benefit accrued to his son, which ought to have been enjoyed by the son of deceased partner:—Held: the widow not having claimed the benefit of the nomination, & having acquiesced in the appointment made, could have no claim in equity.—VANSITTART v. OSBORNE (1871), 20 W. R. 195.

966. Within time fixed.]—By indentures of partnership between A., B., & C., it was provided that, in case of the death of either of the parties during the continuance of the partnership, then the exor. or administrator of deceased partner should have the option of succeeding to the share of such deceased partner in the partnership business & effects, if he, she, or they should think proper, & should give notice of such his, her, or their intention, within three calendar months after the decease of the partner so dying, to the surviving partner or partners. C. died on Feb. 20, 1844, intestate; on May 15 his widow gave the surviving partners notice of her intention to avail herself of the option of succeeding to her deceased husband's share of the business: & on Dec. 10 she took out letters of administration, & thereby became his sole legal representative:—Held: this was not an effectual notice, within the meaning of the indenture.—HOLLAND v. KING (1848), 6 C. B. 727; 136 E. R. 1433.

Annotation:—Apld. Dibbins v. Dibbins, [1896] 2 Ch. 348.

967. —— Partners restrained from depreciating business pending election.]—E. & H. were partners under arts. One of the terms was, that on the decease of either partner, his personal representative should have the power, within three months, of electing to continue the share of the deceased partner; & if he declined, then the business, stock-in-trade, etc., were to be valued, & the surviving partner was to take the whole, giving security for the moiety late belonging to the deceased partner. E. died:—Held: during the three months, or until E.'s personal representative should elect, the survivor, H. was to be prevented by injunction from carrying on the business in any other firm than what had been used in the life of E.—EVANS v. HUGHES (1854), 18 Jur. 691.

968. On attaining certain age—Right of other partners to dissolve before time reached.]—A. assigned his business to three of his clerks, reserving a share of the profits for the benefit of a son to be nominated by him, & who on attaining twenty-one was to have the option of being admitted a partner. The arts. of partnership, to which A. was a party, gave power to the partners to dissolve with mutual consent, & also a power to any partner to withdraw, so long as stated intervals were left between the retirement of partners. Defts., the two existing partners, one of whom had come in under a subsequent deed, just before the son came of age, announced a dissolution of the partnership, & recommenced the same description of business under another name:—Held: without the consent of A. the attempted dissolution was not effectual, as it was contrary to the intention of the original arts., & subversive of the rights of A.—ALLHUSEN v. BORRIES (1867), 15 W. R. 739.

969. —— ——.]—Several persons carried on business in partnership under arts. which provided for the nomination of a son to succeed to the partner's share in the business, but such son was to succeed only on attaining twenty one, & signing such deed as therein mentioned. Several of the partners appointed a son, but no son had yet attained twenty-one. All the partners save one brought an action against the remaining partner for dissolution:—Held: no immediate trust in favour of the son was created by the arts., & the sons need not be made parties to the action.—EHRMANN v. EHRMANN (1894), 72 L. T. 17; 43 W. R. 125.

B. Property Purchased with Partnership Money.

See Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 21.

975. Whether partnership property — Depends on circumstances of case.]—There is no rule that where lands are bought by partners in trade, & are paid for out of the partnership assets, they of necessity become part of the joint estate ; nor, on the other hand, that if they are not bought for the purposes of the partnership business they are not joint estate ; nor does the form of the conveyance settle the question, which must be determined with reference to all the circumstances of the case.

One of two partners carrying on the business of leather factor bought lands for the purpose of erecting a residence on part of it & selling the remainder to a railway co. He offered a share to his partner who was also desirous of building a house out of town for his residence. The offer was accepted & the purchase-money paid out of the partnership assets ; but the conveyance was to the partners in separate moieties, each of which was conveyed to the usual uses to bar dower. The partners at their individual expense built houses upon portions of the land set apart for the purpose, but the other expenses relating to the land were paid out of the partnership assets :—Held : the whole of the land constituted joint estate.—Re LAURENCE, Ex p. M'KENNA, BANK OF ENGLAND CASE (1861), 3 De G. 976. Purchase of patent—Taken out in name of one partner.]—By arts. of partnership, whereby pltf. & two other parties agreed to become partners as machine manufacturers, it was provided that pltf. should not, without the consent of the other two, use or exercise the business of a machine maker, otherwise than in co-partnership with them. During the partnership a patent was taken out for a carding machine, &, in order to save expense, it was taken out in pltf.'s name, but paid for out of the partnership funds, to which he had contributed nothing. Upon the dissolution of the partnership, pltf. assigned all his estate & interest in the partnership effects to his partners, who continued to make the carding machines as before :—Held : as there was evidence of pltf. having taken out which removed it from him he could maintain the action, & the patent did not pass under the deed of assignment.—BIRCH v. WOOD (1843), 2 L. T. O. S. 2.

977. Purchase by two partners—Third partner holding under declaration of trust.]—TIBBITS v. PHILLIPS, No. 932, ante.

978. Discharge of mortgage by three partners—Fourth partner having paid consideration for admission—On basis of property being freehold.]—G. bought a share in a co-partnership business established by S., D., & L., in Sydney, New South Wales. No regular deed of co-partnership was executed, but by an agreement between them it incompetent to establish by proof, that they were the property of a co. of which he was a partner.—ORD v. BARTON (1846), 8 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 1011 ; 18 Sc. Jur. 505.—SCOT.

was stipulated that some interest, the nature & extent of which was not defined, in a piece of land, wharf, & premises, upon which the partnership business was carried on, should form part of the partnership property. This property was then held by S., D., & L., under a lease, & was also subject to a mtge. During the negotiation for the partnership, S., D., & L., paid off the mtge., & acquired by purchase the fee of the property, & upon failure of the partnership concern sold the same, receiving the consideration money, which they refused to account for to G., or to treat as partnership assets, on the ground, that the property had been acquired by them on their separate account, & not purchased with the partnership assets:—Held: S. D., & L., having purchased the fee in the property during the negotiation for the partnership, & the consideration money paid by G. for his share in such partnership being based upon the fact of the property being freehold, the purchase must be treated as being for the benefit of the partnership concern; & G. was entitled to participate & share with S., D., & L. in the freehold interest so acquired, G. contributing in the sum paid by S., D., & L., for the purchase thereof to the extent of his share in the partnership.—GORDON v. SCOTT (1858), 12 Moo. P. C. C. 1; 14 E. R. 812.

979. Purchase by one partner for himself.]—A ship was purchased by a partner for himself, but was paid for out of the partnership assets. The firm became bkpt.:—Held: the firm had no interest in the ship, or any lien on it for the amount of the purchase-money.—WALTON v. BUTLER (1861), 29 Beav. 428; 54 E. R. 693.

980. Purchase of land employed in business.]—A testator, a nurseryman, devised his real estate, on part of which he had carried on his business, & his residuary estate, to his three sons, F., M., & J., as tenants in common. After his death they carried on the business in partnership, & out of moneys belonging to the estate completed a contract for the purchase of more land which was inchoate at the death, & employed such land in the business. Subsequently, F. & J. purchased M.'s third share in the land & business, & paid for it partly out of the estate & partly out of moneys borrowed on the land. F. & J. then continued the business on the land. F. subsequently died intestate:—Held: both the devised & the purchased land employed in the business was converted.

The land used in the trade is part of the partnership property & therefore personal estate (JAMES, L.J.).—WATERER v. WATERER (1873), L. R. 15 Eq. 402; 21 W. R. 508.

981. Conveyance to one partner.]—William Wray carried on business under his own name at Laurel House, North Hill, Highgate, in partnership with his sons, & another person. He died in 1885, & his widow was admitted as a partner in his place. The business was carried on as before & under the same name. In 1890 the partners bought a house & paid for it out of the partnership assets. The conveyance was made between the vendor of the one part & William Wray of Laurel House, Highgate, of the other part, & the property was conveyed to William Wray in fee simple:—Held: the legal estate passed by the conveyance to the four partners as joint tenants.—WRAY v. WRAY, [1905] 2 Ch. 349; 74 L. 983. —— Partnership to continue during lease.]—P. having a lease of salt works & entering into partnership with H., brought it into the partnership capital, in consideration of H.'s brother advancing money to the firm & taking an under lease by way of mtge. for the same, H. being allowed a larger share of profits for ten years. A dispute having arisen at the sale of the lease, whether this lease did not continue the separate property of P., subject to the use of the firm while the partnership lasted:—Held: it was a partnership asset, & this appeared from the following circumstances: viz., that the lease had been at a rack rent; the firm was to have the benefit of it, & the firm was to last during the currency of the lease; there was a provision as to what was to be done with the lease in the contingency of a dissolution; on the mtge. being paid off, the equity of redemption was to be conveyed to the firm; & on a sale of the lease at the dissolution, the surplus was to be paid over to P., & he was to repurchase H.'s interest.—HILLS v. PARKER (1861), 4 L. 984. —— Firm paying rent.]—Where the premises upon which a partnership business is carried on are, & are declared by the partnership deed to be, the property of one partner, & the partnership deed contains no provision as to the tenancy of the partnership, but only a general direction that all rent is to be paid out of profits, the ct. will infer that the partnership was intended to hold the premises on a tenancy during the continuance of the partnership & not on a tenancy from year to year or at will.—POCOCK v. CARTER, [1912] 1 Ch. 663; 81 L. J. Ch. 391; 106 L. T. 423; 56 Sol. Jo. 362.

985. Trade mark.]—Upon the formation of a partnership with a person entitled to a trade mark, such mark will, in the absence of express provisions in relation to it, become an asset of the partnership, for the whole trade is carried into the partnership, & the trade mark is but one element in it. Such a trade mark is, therefore, capable of being assigned by the partnership & the ct. will after an assignment to a purchaser restrain the firm, or any partner in it, from himself using the mark & from assigning it to any other person.—BURY v. BEDFORD (1864), 4 De G. 986. Patent.]—When a partnership at will is formed, for the purpose of working an invention for which a patent has previously been taken out by & registered in the name of one of the partners alone, the patent becomes an asset of the partnership, & each partner acquires a right to practise the invention; & this right is not taken away by the registered owners, assigning the patent to third parties who have notice of the existence of the partnership.—KENNY'S PATENT BUTTON-HOLEING CO., LTD. v. SOMERVELL & LUTWYCHE (1878), 38 L. 987. Mill & plant.] — On the formation of a partnership it was agreed that the business should be carried on at a mill belonging to R., one of the partners; & R. was credited in the books of the partnership with the value of the mill. From time to time sums were expended in making additions to & improvements in the mill; & in the yearly balance sheets the mill was entered at the original value increased by the amount so expended, but less a certain amount for depreciation; & the partners were allowed interest on the sums from time to time standing to their capital accounts: —Held: in the absence of any special agreement, the mill was an asset of the partnership, & on a sale of the business, under which the purchase-money of the mill was largely in excess of its value in the books, the difference was profit divisible in the proportions in which the profits of the business were divisible at the time of the sale.

In the absence of special agreement the rise or fall in value of fixed plant or real estate belonging to a partnership was as much profit or loss of the partnership as anything else (JESSEL, M.R.). —ROBINSON v. ASHTON, ASHTON v. ROBINSON (1875), L. 988. Whether converting joint into separate estate.]—A., B., C. & D. were partners in a banking house at Liverpool, & C. & D. also carried on a separate mercantile concern in London; F. S. having accepted bills payable at the house of C. & D. employed A., B., C. & D. to get them paid accordingly, & agreed to deposit with them good bills indorsed by him, for the purpose of enabling them so to do; A., B., C. & D. debited F. S. in account for his acceptances, & credited him for all the bills which he deposited; some of the bills so deposited by F. S. were remitted by A., B., C. & D. to C. & D. upon the general account between the two houses, & before any of the acceptances of F. S. became due both houses failed, & F. S. was obliged to pay his own acceptances:—Held: the assignees of C. & D. were entitled to retain against F. S. the bills remitted to them by A., B., C. & D.

There can be no doubt that as between themselves a partnership may have transactions with an individual partner or with two or more of the partners having their separate estate engaged in some joint concern in which the general partnership is not interested: & that they may by their acts convert the joint property of the general partnership into the separate property of an individual partner or into the joint property of two or more partners or e converso (EYRE, C.J.). —BOLTON v. PULLER (1796), 1 Bos. & P. 539; 126 E. K. died without receiving payment of the bills, & the first set were lost. The surviving partners executed a creditors' deed, & the second set of bills not having been indorsed, were claimed by the trustees of the deed as partnership assets, & by K.'s exors. as his separate estate. By arrangement the bills were indorsed to stakeholders, & the money was paid into ct.:—Held: K. was not entitled to withdraw the £4,000 when the firm was insolvent, & as the money had not actually reached his hands it belonged to the joint creditors.—Re KEMPTNER (1869), L. SUB-SECT. 1.—NATURE OF SHARE.

A. In General.

See Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 23.

998. Share of surplus after payment of partnership debts.]—A partner's interest in the partnership, property, is his share upon the division of the surplus after payment of the partnership debts.

Where the sheriff seized the partnership goods under a fi fa., upon a judgment for a separate debt against one of the partners, & a fiat in bkpcy. issued against both partners the day after the seizure, under which the messenger entered, & by arrangement held the goods for both parties, which were subsequently sold, & the proceeds of the sale received by the assignees :—Held : an action for money had & received would not lie at the instance of the execution creditor against the assignees, no settlement of the partnership debts & accounts having been made, & there being therefore no ascertained surplus applicable to pltf.'s execution.—GARBETT v. VEALE (1843), 5 Q. B. 408 ; Dav. & Mer. 458 ; 13 L. J. Q. B. 98 ; 8 Jur. 335 ; 114 E. R. 1303.

999. ——.]—Testator, who was a partner in a mercantile firm, gave the proceeds of the sale of his share of certain real estate which was held as partnership property to charitable uses :—Held : the interest of testator in the partnership property, so far as it comprised moneys arising from the sale of the real estate, was an interest in land under Charitable Uses Act, 1736 (c. 36), & the bequest of it was void.

The share of each of the other partners no doubt is not a share in any specific asset or any specific part of the assets real or personal, but is his share of what will ultimately come to him when the accounts are ascertained, & when the partners who are to contribute have contributed, & when the assets are got in, the debts paid, & the amounts realised (JAMES, L.J.).—ASHWORTH v. MUNN (1880), 15 Ch. The expression "share" is more suitable to that definite share in the mtge. which M. If the wife would be paid out of the separate estate of A. on there being effects, she shall have a preference before other creditors ; but if there is no separate estate, & the wife would have satisfaction out of the partnership effects, then all the partnership debts must be first paid.—CROFT v. PYKE (1733), 3 P. 1010. —— Right of assignees of bankrupt partner.]—A partnership being dissolved by the bkpcy. of one partner, the assignees are entitled, beyond an account & distribution of the stock, etc., to a participation of subsequent profits, made by the other partners, carrying on the trade with the capital, as constituted at the time of the bkpcy. Qu.: as far as the profits may have been produced by a joint application of that & other funds.

There may be a partnership where, whether the parties have agreed for the determination of it at a particular period, or not, engagements must, from the nature of it, be contracted, which cannot be fulfilled during the existence of the partnership; & the consequence is, that for the purpose of making good those engagements with third persons it must continue; & then, instead of being, as it was, a general partnership, it is a general partnership, determined, except as it still subsists for the purpose only of winding up the concerns (LORD ELDON, C.).

Another mode of determination [of partnership] is, not by effluxion of time, but by the death of one partner (LORD ELDON, C.).

I cannot go the length of holding that there may not have been profits in which these assignees are not entitled to participate. I will not say that they have a right to participate in all the profits that have been made. I shall therefore direct an inquiry to ascertain whether the profits that have been made were made by any & what application of the funds which the report states constituted the capital in Oct. 1803, or by the application of any other & what funds (LORD ELDON, C.).—CRAWSHAY v. COLLINS (1808), 15 Ves. 218; 33 E. It had been usual to enter at such meeting a notice of this offer in a book open to the inspection of all the proprietors both present & absent, but not to serve any notice personally:—Held: whether regard were had to the words of the deed, or to the mode of acting, such entry was a sufficient notice.—GLASSINGTON v. THWAITES (1833), Coop. temp. Brough. 115; 47 E. 1057. B. & C., being the sole proprietors of a newspaper, by indenture divide the concern into a certain number of shares, & confer certain rights of pre-emption, according to fixed rates of price & in a certain order, on each other mutually, & on all future holders of shares. Having all along continued to be, & still being, the sole proprietors, they afterwards assign certain shares, with their appurtenances, & all their right, title, & interest in these shares to A.; & various new conditions, with respect to A.'s interest, are introduced into the deeds of assignment, but nothing is said as to the right of pre-emption:—Held: A. is entitled to the rights of pre-emption annexed by the first-mentioned indenture to his shares.—STEWART v. STUART, STUART & STREET v. STEWART (1823), as reported in 1 L. One of four partners offered his shares to the other three collectively, one of whom to his knowledge would not purchase. The remaining two declared their willingness to accept, & were told that no offer was made to them:—Held: the offer to the three enured for the benefit of the two, & specific performance decreed accordingly.—HOMFRAY v. FOTHERGILL (1866), L. 1062. —— Non-compliance for some time—Subsequent lunacy of offeree.]—Several persons, having obtained a mining lease for sixty years, entered into partnership in "the business of iron ore workers" for that period. The business consisted of winning & selling hematite iron in an unmanufactured state. One of them having become lunatic, the ct. dissolved the partnership & directed the whole concern to be sold by an indifferent person, with liberty to the parties to bid.

(2) By partnership arts. between A., B. & C., it was agreed that upon the sale by a partner of his share in a mining concern, his co-partners should have a right of pre-emption. The surviving partner was of unsound mind, but notice of his intention to purchase was given on his behalf by his solr. within three months from the death. An order was subsequently made under the Lunacy Acts authorising a notice being given on his behalf, & a second notice was given accordingly, but after the three months had expired:—Held: as the option to purchase had not been exercised within the time limited, there was no contract which could be confirmed by the second notice, &, consequently, the committee of the surviving partner was not entitled to the benefit of the provision in the arts.—DIBBINS v. DIBBINS, [1896] 2 Ch. 348; 65 L. 1070. Right of one of several partners to purchase another's share for own benefit—Clauses not worded so as to prevent sale.]—A prosperous co. came to consist of three partners, A., B., & C., having equal shares. The contract of co-partnership contained (inter alia) a clause that it should not be in the power of any of the partners to assign all or any part of their shares or interest in the capital, stock, or profits of the concern to any person or persons, or give them a right to inspect the co.'s books, or to interfere in any way with the business; & should any such assignation be granted the same was declared of no effect as far as regards the co. There was also a clause that on the retirement of a partner the remaining partners should have power to buy his interest at the amount standing to his credit at the last balance. A. entered into an agreement by which he sold to B. his whole interest. A.'s name remained on the books, & he signed all deeds relating to the business till his death seven years after. C. was not till then informed of the agreement. He then claimed to participate on the grounds of (a) an alleged mandate to B. to purchase for the co. A.'s interest; (b) that the agreement could only be legally made under the contract of co-partnership with his consent; & (c) that B. had secretly acquired a benefit for himself within the scope of the partnership business:—Held: in point of fact no agreement had been made between B. & C. to the effect that B. was to buy A.'s interest for the partnership. In respect to the arts. of co-partnership they did not prevent the agreement being made, & otherwise it was perfectly legal. Therefore C. was not entitled to any benefit under it.

Those cases proceed upon the ground that a partner being an agent, for I think it is because he is an agent that the fiduciary character arises, if he, as agent, makes a profit out of the concerns of his principal, & as acting for him, he must communicate it to his principal; he cannot make a profit out of his principal's business for himself (LORD BLACKBURN).—CASSELS v. STEWART (1881), 6 App. Cas. 64; 29 W. 1084. —— For subsequent losses of partnership.]—G. L., a retiring partner of the firm of B. & co., applied to G. & co., bankers, for a loan of £20,000 on the security of his share in the partnership, & informed them by letter that the amount of his share might be taken at about £25,000 ; & that he was informed by W. B., his former partner, that part of the balance at credit with C. L. & co., of which G. L. was a member, on account of B. & co., would be appropriated towards payment thereof, & that he would authorise W. B. to pay the amount to G. & co., & he thereby bound himself to give G. & co. a full & perfect lien therein. Afterwards, W. B. wrote to G. & co., through G. L., stating that they had instructed C. & co. to transfer to them £5,000, the surplus partnership assets of B. & co., in their hands, & engaging to pay the remaining balance of G. L.'s capital. G. L. sent to G. & co. a promissory note payable to the order of C. L. & co., with the letter of W. B., as a collateral security, & the £20,000 was accordingly advanced. The firm of C. L. & co. became insolvent & the promissory note when due was presented & dishonoured. G. & co. filed a bill against the surviving members of the firm of B. & co., & the representatives of deceased partner, who claimed to be allowed to deduct the £5,000 in the hands of C. L. & co., referred to in the letter :—Held : pltfs. were equitable assignees of G. partners, his exors. carried on the business with the two surviving ones for a twelve month longer, & then dissolved the partnership; upon which occasion the two continuing partners gave the exors. a bond to secure the balance due to them; & more than six years afterwards the two become bkpt.:—Held: the exors. had a right to prove the amount of the bond against the joint estate of the two continuing partners.—Re BOOTHBY, Ex p. HALL (1838), 3 Deac. 125, Ct. of R.

After the senior partner's death the surviving partners executed a bond to his exors., according to the arts., to secure the balance due to their testator, & by a contemporaneous deed the exors. assigned to the surviving partners all the testator's share of the business, & the surviving partners covenanted to pay all the joint debts. 1089. —— Lien of trade creditors of continuing partners.]—A trader, by his will, appointed his partner & other parties exors., & authorised his partner to purchase his share of the trade, premises & stock; & if he declined to do so, the trade was to be carried on for the benefit of the testator's wife & family. A valuation was made, & the surviving partner took possession of the whole partnership property under circumstances which induced the ct. to set aside the sale as invalid. The surviving partner, & subsequently his son & legatee, carried on the business for several years, & the son ultimately became bkpt. The partnership property was then sold, & the proceeds paid into ct.:—Held: the representatives of deceased partner were entitled to one moiety of the fund in ct., & also to a lien on the other moiety for sums which were found by the master to be due to them from the estate of W.; & their claim ought to be satisfied in preference to the debts of the creditors of the bkpt., the case not being affected by the question, whether any of the partnership stock was or was not in the order or disposition of the bkpt.—STOCKEN v. DAWSON (1848), 17 L. J. Ch. 282, L. C.

1090. —— Payment by instalments with interest—Calculation of interest.]—A deed of partnership provided that in the event of the death of any of the partners, & in the event of the surviving partners electing to continue the business, the amount at the credit of deceased partner as at the last balance "shall be paid out to his representative by instalments of equal amount at six, twelve, etc., up to sixty months' date," "from the date of the surviving partners declaring their election," "with interest thereon from the date of the balance." The chief partner, whose interest was about £394,340 in the concern, died. The surviving partners having elected to continue the business, sought to pay his representative by ten equal instalments, with interest on the amount of each instalment from substantially the date of the death to the date of payment. In a claim by deceased partner's representative that interest should be added to each instalment on the balance of the capital sum remaining unpaid at the date of the payment of each such instalment; thus reaping an advantage of about £2,365 from the earlier payment of the larger sums of interest:—Held: the interest to be paid with each instalment was interest calculated upon the balance of the capital sum unpaid at that date, & not interest upon the amount of each instalment.—EWING v. EWING (1882), 8 App. Cas. 822, H. A. executed the co.'s deed alone, in the name of the firm. Two calls were paid by the firm, & dividends were received by the firm, as part of the partnership assets. The firm then dissolved partnership, & all the assets & liabilities, the above shares being particularly specified, were transferred from A. to B. The co. failed, & was wound up under the Act. It then appeared that the liabilities of the co. were not limited, & B. alleged that A. alone was liable as a contributory :—Held : the misrepresentation as to the limited liabilities not being wilful, & the co. assenting, B. was primarily liable, & A. secondarily liable, as contributories.—Re PROTESTANT ASSURANCE ASSOCN., Ex p. LETTS & STEER (1857), 26 L. 1098. —— Partner taking onerous lease as trustee for firm—Lease assigned to company with covenant to indemnify partnership.]—In 1879 two partners in a firm took an onerous lease on behalf of & as trustees for the partnership & entered into joint covenants with the lessors. On Nov. 15, 1886, all the original partners, including the two trustees, entered into an agreement to transfer the assets & liabilities to a limited co. The co. agreed to indemnify them against the partnership liabilities & to take all reasonable steps in their power to bring about a novation to the co. of all liabilities of the partnership & a release therefrom of the partnership & the several partners. On Nov. 27, 1886, one trustee died. On Nov. 4, 1887, the surviving trustee in pursuance of the agreement assigned the lease to the co. on the usual covenant for indemnity. About the same time he also conveyed other freehold & leasehold partnership property to the co. in pursuance of the agreement, without reserving any part to cover the indemnity. On Feb. 18, 1891, the surviving trustee died. In 1909, the co. having made default, the surviving trustee's exors. were compelled to pay £5,874 for arrears of rent, breach of covenants of the lease, & costs :—Held : neither the agreement, nor the assignment & conveyances in pursuance thereof, nor the change of the trust relationship thereby effected, amounted to any novation of the surviving trustee's original right to indemnity & contribution against the partners, & his exors. were therefore entitled to enforce this right against the partners or their estates.—MATTHEWS v. RUGGLES-BRISE, [1911] 1 Ch. 194 ; 80 L. R. 1276.

1105. ——.]—The managing partner of a colliery worked beyond the boundaries of the colliery without proper inquiry as to such boundaries, &, after notice from the adjoining owner that he was committing a trespass, recklessly continued such workings without consulting his co-partners under the bonâ fide belief that the adjoining owner had no title to the disputed area. An action against him for trespass & damages by the adjoining owner was referred to arbn. The co-partners had no knowledge of the action until after the reference had been agreed to. They attended the reference, however, & did not object to it. The arbitrator found that a trespass had been committed, & assessed the damages at £6,000. The co-partners refusing to contribute, the managing partner brought an action against them claiming a declaration that the £6,000 damages was a partnership debt, & that defts. were bound to contribute ratably to it:—Held: (1) the co-partners had acquiesced in the arbn. & were bound by the award, which was equivalent to a verdict by a jury & the judgment of the ct. thereon; but (2) inasmuch as the managing partner had acted with culpable negligence in continuing to work in the disputed area after notice from the adjoining proprietor, & without consulting his co-partners, he alone was liable for the damages.—THOMAS v. ATHERTON (1878), 10 Ch. On the arrival in the country of the persons proceeding on the expedition they were seized & thrown into prison, and owing to this the project failed, & the loss greatly exceeded the limit fixed by the resolutions:—Held: the trustees could not call on the subscribers for contribution beyond the fixed amount.—GILLAN v. MORRISON (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 421; 9 L. 1115. —— Inconsistent stipulations.] — One clause of a joint stock co.'s partnership deed declared that no member should in any case, as between himself & the partnership, be liable for any debts, calls, or demands upon the said co. after he should have ceased to be a member, "save only & except for & in respect of any sum or sums which he shall or may be liable to pay by reason of any forfeiture, penalty, or misconduct." A subsequent clause declared, that after transfer "the former or last proprietor thereof shall thenceforth be for ever acquitted & discharged of & from all covenants, agreements, regulations, obligations, & liabilities whatsoever" in respect of the shares transferred, "save only in respect of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability which shall have been previously incurred by him, her, or them in regard thereto":—Held: (1) the saving as to liability in the first clause meant, in respect of any personal liability of the member to the co.; (2) the saving in the latter clause must be construed to mean the same personal liability, for that to give it a larger construction would be to annul the discharge from liability previously given.—Re OUNDLE UNION BREWERY CO., CROXTON'S CASE (1852), 1 De G. 1116. On demand for payment of debt—No demand made—Action by representatives of deceased partner.]—Under a written instrument of partnership entered into in Feb. 1920, between five co-partners for the development & ultimate resale of a freehold estate which they had purchased it was provided that, upon the death of any of the partners before the estate had been completely sold, the share or interest of the one so dying should be purchased by the others in equal shares at a price to be fixed by arbn. in case of difference, & the legal personal representatives of the deceased partner were to be "indemnified" by the surviving partners from all future claims, liabilities, & demands, in respect of the said estate. One of the partners died on Oct. 4, 1921, & the greater part of the freehold estate was still unsold. At the date of the partner's death the partnership account at a bank was largely overdrawn. The overdraft was secured by the guarantee of each partner. The exact amount of the overdraft was subsequently ascertained by the bank to be £17,126 16*s.* 2*d.*, & the manager informed the exor. of deceased partner of this, & of the liability of the partnership syndicate & testator's estate, but no demand for payment was ever made. In an action by pltf. as legal personal representative of deceased partner against his four co-partners as defts. claiming specific performance of the partnership agreement & requiring a proper discharge & release from all the liabilities of the partnership, particularly in respect of the overdraft at the bank:—Held: the ordinary covenant contained in the agreement to indemnify the estate of deceased partner did not entitle pltf. to insist upon the immediate payment of debts for which no demand had been made. The obligation to make good the indemnity by payment & the right to enforce the covenant arose when the demand for payment was made & not before, therefore, pltf. was not entitled to what would be in substance an order on defts. to repay all that was owing to the bank, & the action failed.—BRADFORD v. GAMMON, [1925] Ch. 132; 94 L. A. valued the property, & in conjunction with T. sold it to a co., whereupon H. & co. gave A. & T. £5,000. 1132. —— Benefit derived from "office"—Pay of army officers.]—A partnership deed made in 1909 between pltf. & deft., who were solrs., provided that "the salary or other benefit derived by either partner from any office which he may hold during the continuance of the partnership shall be treated as forming part of the profits," & that after five years pltf. should not be obliged to attend to the business any further than he thought proper. In 1914, pltf. joined the army with the rank of major, & in 1918 he was demobilised. The partnership was dissolved in 1921:—Held: the word "office" in the deed included the position of an officer in the army, & on taking the accounts the pay received by pltf. as an officer was to be treated as profits of the partnership.—CARLYON-BRITTON v. LUMB (1922), 38 T. 1133. Increase in value of book debts—Over-estimate in partnership deed.]—A father trading alone took his sons into partnership, & undertook to bring into the business "all his capital then or usually employed therein, without any allowance of interest." In estimating the father's capital, the book debts due to him were, according to the custom of the trade, valued at 20 per cent. below their nominal amount; but they actually realised more. The father withdrew large sums from the capital, to pay trade debts incurred before the substituted capital of his own. In the absence of express contract:—Held: (1) the sum realised for book debts, beyond the estimated amount, was capital, & not partnership profits; but the fact that the father had taken the sons into partnership by way of advancement, was at once conclusive on this point; (2) no interest was payable to the sons on account of capital withdrawn by the father to pay trade debts due at the date of the partnership; (3) no interest was payable to the sons on account of additional capital brought in by them.

The withdrawal by a partner of capital, in order to pay his private debts, is so far for the benefit of the other partners, as preventing the mischief that would arise from an execution against the partnership property, that, in the absence of fraud, no interest is payable to the other partners on account of the capital so withdrawn.

Semble: interest may, under some circumstances, be payable between partners on account of capital brought in or withdrawn, independently of express contract.—COOKE v. BENBOW (1865), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 1; 6 New Rep. 135; 46 E. R. 538, L. JJ.

(2) Where the fixing a value by arbitrators is not of the essence of an agreement, the ct. will carry the agreement into effect, & will itself, if necessary, ascertain the value.

(3) Where profits are left by a partner in a business he will not, in the absence of a special agreement, be allowed interest on them.

The two solrs. accepted the appointment without making any definite arrangement as to the division of the business, or of the emoluments of the office, & a much larger portion of the work was done by deft. than by pltf. In a conversation between them about six months after the appointment, & before the principal part of the business was transacted, pltf. stated, as the result of his inquiries into the practice in like cases, that the allowance for office expenses & personal trouble in such limited partnerships between solrs. was made by each party retaining besides his expenses & disbursements, from 10 to 25 per cent. on the amount of the net charges for the business done, & which principle he considered satisfactory; & deft., in reply, observed that there could be no misunderstanding about it between honourable men. 1151. —— Release by one partner.]—At a meeting held in 1852, between pltf. & deft., two solrs., it was agreed that the professional business connected with the formation of a new line of railway should be apportioned between them; that they should co-operate as solrs. in getting up the co., & obtaining the Act of Parliament at their own risk; that each should provide the cash for his own disbursements, such disbursements to be repaid in the first instance, & then that any profits should be equally divided between them. The co. was formed & the Act obtained; & at a meeting of the co. in Mar. 1855, a proposal in writing was made by pltf. & deft., & confirmed by the co., that pltf. & deft. should be allowed £1,500, in paid-up shares, in addition to their disbursements, such £1,500 to be received in full for all professional business up to the then present time, but to be subject to revision in case the line should be completed. In 1856 part of the line was commenced, but the works were stopped for the want of funds. These funds were afterwards supplied by deft., & others, pltf. not being able to contribute. In 1858 a small part of the line was completed, & pltf., early in 1859, pressed the co. for payment on account of his costs. In May, 1859, the co. paid pltf. £450 in cash & £740 in paid-up shares, & took from him a general release of all claims. From that time pltf. ceased to act as solr. to the co. Deft. said that some time in 1858 he told pltf. when he was pressing the co., that he (deft.) should henceforth decline undertaking any fresh business of the co. in co-operation with him; & alleged that since the date of the release he had had nothing whatever to do with pltf. He admitted pltf.'s right to have the profits attending the obtaining of the Act of Parliament; but insisted that the memorandum of Mar. 1855, & the payments & release of May, 1859, settled all questions between pltf. & himself. He denied that any partnership was ever constituted between pltf. & himself:—Held: the release did not put an end to the agreement between the parties, & pltf. was entitled to a decree for an account down to Apr. 1859.—HANSLIP v. KITTON (1862), 7 L. T. 291; 8 Jur. N. S. 1113, L. C.

1152. —— Variation of agreement as to number of partners.]—(1) Pltf. B., who was an architect, agreed with defts., A. & K., who were wharf-building speculators & wharfingers, to render his financial & other assistance & supervision in the construction & completion of warehouses on two wharves, of which it was proposed to procure a lease; &, in consideration of such his assistance & supervision, to receive one equal fifth part or share of the profits of the speculation & undertaking. A lease of the X. property was procured, but the negotiations for the Y. property fell through at the time. Pltf., it was originally intended, should be one of five, the other four to consist of two defts. & two capitalist gentlemen, whom it was intended to secure. Eventually defts., in lieu of procuring two capitalists to be admitted into the partnership, borrowed the sum of £18,000 on mtge. of the premises by way of raising capital for the concern. No new agreement was entered into regarding the shares of the three parties to the original agreement:—Held: pltf. B. was only entitled to one-fifth share as fixed in the agreement, but such share should not be liable to the mtge. debt of £18,000.

(2) The Y. property became the subject of new negotiations on behalf of the partnership, but these latter negotiations also fell through. Some years after the date of the original agreement relating to the Y. property, deft. A. succeeded in obtaining a lease of the Y. property & claimed to retain it for his own benefit. Deft. A. had not previously declared in express terms that he considered the original agreement at an end:—Held: the Y. property still remained subject to the partnership agreement, & pltf. B. was entitled to one-fifth share in that property also.—BELL v. BARNETT (1872), 21 W. R. 119.

1154. Construction of articles—Guarantee of fixed sum.]—By arts. of partnership between pltf. & two defts. it was agreed that pltf. should reside & manage the business abroad, & that he might draw for his private use to the extent of £500, until the yearly balance sheet was made, & the amount of profit ascertained. After payment of specified expenses, the partners were declared entitled to the gains & profits of the business in the following proportions: deft. K. to four-tenths, deft. H. to two-tenths, & pltf. to four-tenths. In case the gains should be found insufficient to pay the expenses, the deficiency was to be borne in the same proportions; &, in consideration of pltf. devoting his whole time to the business, defts. agreed to guarantee to pltf. "that the four-tenths share in the profits to be received by him during the first two years should not be less than £500 per annum; & further, that if the net profits should at any time, upon the division thereof, exceed £1,500 a year, pltf. should receive an additional bonus of £10 per cent. upon the gross earnings":—Held: the true construction was, that if there should be a profit, & four-tenths of that profit should be less than £500, pltf. was to take £500 but if there should be no profit, then the guarantee was not to emerge.—CROKER v. KREEFT, KREEFT v. CROKER (1865), 13 L. 1155. —— Provision of annuity for retiring partner—Whether creating a trust.]—Arts. of partnership between two solrs. provided that the partnership should be for the term of ten years from May 1, 1875, if both the partners should so long live. The partnership was also made determinable by notice. There was a further provision that from the determination of the partnership the retiring partner, his exors. or administrators, or the exors. or administrators of deceased partner, should be entitled to receive out of the net profits of the partnership business, during so much, if any, of the term of five years from May 1, 1880, as should remain after the determination of the partnership, the yearly sum of £350, & during so much, if any, of the term of five years from May 1, 1885, as either the retiring partner, or a widow of the retiring or deceased partner, should be living, the yearly sum of £250, any sum which might under this provision for the time being become payable to the exors. or administrators of deceased partner, to be applied in such manner as such partner should by deed or will direct for the benefit of his widow & children, & in default of such direction to be paid to such widow, if living, for her own benefit. It was further provided that the annuity should, so far as legally might be, be constituted a charge on the net profits of the business. One of the partners died in 1883, leaving a widow, but without having given any direction as to the application of the annuity. By his will he appointed his widow his universal legatee & sole extrix. He died insolvent, & an action was brought by the creditor to administer his estate:—Held: the annuity did not form part of testator's estate, but by the arts. a trust of it was created in favour of the widow, & she was entitled to it free from the claims of testator's creditors.

The fund came to the hands of the exors. impressed with a trust; & not merely subject to a direction given by F. [testator] which he could have altered by a contract for value (COTTON, L.J.).—Re FLAVELL, MURRAY v. FLAVELL (1883), 25 Ch. D. 89; 53 L. J. Ch. 185; 49 L. T. 690; 32 W. R. 102, L. JJ.

1156. Profits treated as capital—Expended on improvements.]—Exors. under a power contained in the will continued to carry on the partnership colliery business of their testator for the benefit of his estate. Under the will the widow took a life interest in the profits. A small amount of the profit only was distributed during the lifetime of the widow, in accordance with formal resolutions passed by the partners. Large accumulations were used for business purposes & the undivided balances were carried to a profit & loss account, no resolution being passed to capitalise such accumulations. On the death of the widow her representatives claimed testator's share in those profits as against his estate, & the Vice-Chancellor decided that they were entitled. The other exors. of testator appealed:—Held: the question depended upon the terms of the partnership, which was not an ordinary partnership, as the majority of the partners could decide what was to be done. They had treated these profits for many years as capital, & had decided not to divide them, & neither testator nor his exors. could at any time have received them, especially after they had been spent upon the works of the colliery. The order of the Vice-Chancellor must be discharged so far as it affected so much of the profits as had been employed as capital in improving & extending the colliery business; & a declaration made that the tenant for life was not entitled to these profits.—STRAKER v. WILSON (1871), 6 Ch. The partnership was dissolved by the death of J.:—Held: (1) as between the trustees & J.'s estate the trustees under the covenant were not entitled to have paid to them out of his share of the partnership assets surplus income which, although appearing in the partnership accounts as excess of receipts over expenditure during a particular year, was, by the settled practice of the partners, treated otherwise than as distributable profits & devoted to colliery equipment & replacing assets that had been worn out; (2) the share of any surplus which became divisible when the partnership was wound up did not come within the covenant.—GARWOOD v. GARWOOD (1911), 105 L. 1160. Accounts made up half-yearly.]—Partnership arts. provided that meetings of the partners should be held, & the profits should be divided annually. The partners when reduced to two, testator being one of them, met & resolved that the accounts should be made up half-yearly, in Mar. & Sept. The meetings of the partners were held very irregularly, but when they took place it was the practice of the partners to examine the accounts, & to pass a resolution disposing of the profits, & until the passing of such resolution the profits were not carried to the separate credits. Testator, who died in Aug. 1869, by will declared that from the day of his decease the annual income arising from his residuary personal estate should belong, in effect, to A. for life, & that for that purpose the clear profits arising from his partnership should be considered as annual income, & be paid to A. for life. In Dec. 1869, at a meeting of the surviving partner & an exor. of testator, they resolved that the profits for the year ending Mar. 1869, should be divided; & testator's share was carried to the credit of his account under date Sept. 30, 1869, & it was, in Dec. 1869, paid to his exors. At a meeting of the same two persons in Mar. 1870, they ordered the profits for the half-year ending Sept. 1869, to be divided, & testator's share was paid to his exors. In taking the account in chambers a question arose whether these shares of testator should be distinguished as capital or as income, & A. presented a petition, under Ct. of Chancery Act, 1852 (c. 80), asking for the opinion of the ct.:—Held: the profits for the year ending Mar. 1869, were capital, & belonged to testator's estate; & the profits for the half-year ending Sept. 1869, were income, & belonged to A.—BROWNE v. COLLINS (1871), L. 1161. Payment of interest in lieu of profits—Right of representative to elect—Effect of delay in effecting sale of share.]—R. was the chief partner in a large & prosperous trade. By the arts. of partnership, which were to take effect from June 30, 1853, the cash accounts were to be balanced monthly, the stock & the value of each partner's share were to be ascertained on June 30, in each year, & be written into as many books as there were partners, & each partner was to sign & to possess one book, & be bound thereby. If any partner should die, the partnership as to him was to cease, & his share was to be divided among his surviving partners in proportion to their existing shares, & the value of his share was to be ascertained as at the last stock taking, & it was to be paid for by promissory notes payable at six, twelve, eighteen, & twenty-four months' date; & the surviving partners were to execute a covenant of indemnity to the estate of deceased partner, whose exors. were to execute a transfer of his share. R. died shortly after the stock-taking of 1855, but before the results of it had been duly made up & entered in books. R. had, by his will, appointed his brother, then one of his partners, to be one of his exors.; another exor. was his eldest son, who was not then a partner, but afterwards became so. He directed a sale of his real property, its produce to form part of his personal estate, which he directed to be converted into money & divided equally among his children; as to the males, part at twenty-one, the remainder at twenty-five; as to the females, at twenty-five, with a provision for maintenance in the meantime. The arts. of partnership were acted upon as to the mode of taking the partnership accounts, & so were the directions in the will so far as to the payment of interest on capital, but no promissory notes were given by the partners, nor any covenant of indemnity executed. The shares of the children were duly allotted, & their intermediate allowances paid, but the real estate was not sold, nor the personal estate converted, the money to which testator had been entitled being really permitted to remain in the trade, accounts of profits being duly kept & appropriations to the various children regularly made. The youngest child, on arriving at twenty-five years of age, filed a bill against the exors. as for a breach of trust in not executing the directions in the will; & she prayed for accounts & a declaration of her liberty to elect between the receipt of profits & the receipt of interest on the money that ought to have been invested:—Held: (1) the bill was not sustainable; the will could not affect the arts. of partnership; (2) those arts. constituted a contract for the sale of testator's share to his partners, though the time for the sale was not fixed; (3) the giving of the promissory notes by the partners in the concern to the exors., some of the persons filling both characters, would have been a useless formality; (4) mere delay in the payment of the value of the share did not affect the validity of the contract; & no misconduct in fact being established, the bill must be dismissed.—VYSE v. FOSTER (1874), L. 1162. Profits of subsisting contract—How ascertained.]—Five persons entered into a contract with a foreign govt. for the construction of certain works. Before the works had been begun one of the contractors died, having appointed his brother & his two sons exors. & trustees of his will. An agreement was subsequently drawn up between the four surviving contractors & the exors. & trustees of the will of deceased contractor, by which it was provided that the contract with the foreign govt. should be carried out on the joint account of the co-contractors, & in the best interests of all concerned in the contract, & that the exors. & trustees of the will of deceased contractor should be sleeping partners, the surviving contractors being the acting partners. This agreement was signed by the surviving contractors before the will of deceased contractor had been proved, the names of the exors. & trustees being left in blank in the agreement. Subsequently the brother of deceased contractor renounced probate & disclaimed, & his sons proved the will & signed the agreement. The surviving contractors alleged that they had entered into the agreement on the faith of having the brother of deceased contractor responsible under it & filed a bill to set aside the agreement, & praying for a declaration that the partnership in the contract was dissolved by the death of deceased contractor, so far as his estate was concerned, & that it might be wound up:—Held: (1) independently of the agreement, the legal personal representatives of deceased contractor were entitled to share in the profits, & were liable to contribute to the losses under the contract, & they were entitled to have such profits or losses ascertained by having the contract completed; (2) the agreement was intended to be between the surviving contractors & the persons who should prove the will of deceased contractors as was proved by the names of the latter being left in blank, & the agreement was binding on all parties.—MCCLEAN v. KENNARD (1874), 9 Ch. The lease of the lands was taken in B.'s name, & A. & B. continued in joint occupation of the lands till July, 1843, when B. assumed exclusive possession & ejected A. From July, 1843, B. at his sole labour & expense, carried on operations upon the land by preparing it for building purposes & erecting houses thereon, A. never asserting any title thereto until Jan. 1845, when he claimed an equal interest with B. Upon B. repudiating A.'s title, a bill was filed by A. for specific performance of the parol agreement:—Held: assuming A.'s title to have been good originally, he had debarred himself from asserting that title by making no claim for eighteen months after his exclusion, during all which time he had permitted B. to carry on the undertaking at his own cost & risk; & the bill was dismissed, with costs.—COWELL v. WATTS (1850), 2 H. & Tw. 224; 47 E. 1169. Claim by personal representative—Duty to contribute to expenses—Effect of concealment by surviving partner.]—The representative of deceased partner in a mining concern may forfeit his right to the subsequent profits if he do not with reasonable expedition contribute to its expenses, but this doctrine will not apply to a case where the survivor keeps the representative of deceased partner in ignorance of the real state of the case.

A. & B. were partners in a lead mine, & on A.'s death, B. continued to work it, & four years afterwards obtained a renewal of the lease from N. A.'s representative was not informed of this renewal, nor were any accounts rendered to him by B., though he applied for them:—Held: A.'s interest in the mine did not cease at his death, but survived to his representative; the terms on which he was to take such interest to be settled afterwards.—CLEMENTS v. HALL (1858), 2 De G. & J. 173; 27 L. He directed his trustees to carry on the business until the expiration of the existing partnership term, & authorised them to employ any of the trust premises therein, but he made no provision as to the manner in which losses should be borne between tenant for life & remaindermen. The partnership deed contained no provision as to the mode in which losses were to be borne, but it had been the custom of the firm during testator's lifetime to divide all the profits of each year, & in any year in which there was a loss to write such loss off the capital according to the proportionate shares therein of the partners:—Held: testator's daughter was entitled to receive without deduction one moiety of that share in the profits of each year which testator if living, would have received, & the losses of an unprofitable year must be written off capital, according to the custom of the firm, there being no liability upon testator's daughter, as tenant for life, to recoup out of subsequent profits any losses sustained by the settled share in the capital of the partnership.—GOW v. FORSTER (1884), 26 Ch. 1183. —— Stipulation presumed.]—A stipulation that interest should be allowed on the capital of partners presumed under the circumstances.

In a partnership between A. & B. interest was allowed on the capitals. C., who was a clerk & relative, was cognisant of the terms on which this partnership was carried on. B. retired, & A. & C. continued the business: the whole capital embarked therein belonged to A. There was an absence of all proof of any agreement between A. & C. in respect of interest on capital. D. & E. were afterwards admitted into the business, & an interest account of capital was then resumed:—Held: under these circumstances, & from the knowledge that C. had of the terms on which the first partnership had been carried on, it must be assumed that interest on capital was to be allowed in the second partnership.—MILLAR v. CRAIG (1843), 6 Beav. 433; 49 E. 1189. Interest on balance found due on account—Liability of deceased partner's estate—Breach of duty to account.]—A large shareholder was the manager of the affairs of a co. He rendered accounts regularly from 1826 to his death in 1851. These accounts were not challenged in his life, but after his death items exceeding £2,000 a year were questioned by the co., for which no vouchers could be produced, & no satisfactory explanation given. The account was opened for the whole period of twenty-five years, & it was directed to be taken with special directions.

It will be difficult to persuade me, if, in the result of the accounts, it shall appear that considerable balances have been annually retained by testator, not merely as agent, but in a great measure in the character of a director & trustee, it would, I think, be difficult to persuade me, that his estate can avoid accounting for interest on sums which would have been paid to shareholders, or would have borne interest for the co. in his hands, if he had kept his accounts in the open & proper manner he ought to have done, & communicated them to the shareholders, as it was his duty to do; & if it shall appear also, that these sums belonging to the co. while in his hands produced interest or profit for himself (ROMILLY, M. But upon the death of a partner the last stock taking was to be conclusive "as to the share & amount of interest of deceased partner in the business, & should be the sum to be paid to his exors.," with interest from the last stock taking in lieu of profits from that time:—Held: the estate of deceased partner was entitled not only to 5 per cent. for interest but also to 5 per cent. for profits.

(2) By partnership arts., the clear balance, as ascertained "from the last stock taking" of deceased partner, together with any additional capital, if any, was to be paid to his exors. by instalments, & the last stock taking was to be "conclusive as to the share or amount of interest of deceased partner in the business, & was to be the sum to be paid to his exors.":—Held: as additional capital was to be taken into account, so, impliedly, capital drawn out in the interval between the last stock taking & the death of a partner must be deducted.—BROWNING v. BROWNING (1862), 31 Beav. 316; 54 E. 1197. —— —— Effect of decree for dissolution & sale.]—Partnership arts. provided for allowance of interest on capital before division of profits, & for taking the accounts with half-yearly rests. By a decree for a dissolution of the partnership, the partnership property, stock & effects were directed to be sold & the business to be carried on until the sale, & the balances to be paid into ct. & invested in 3 per cent. annuities. About fourteen months elapsed between the date of the decree & the complete disposition of the partnership property :—Held : the partnership arts. were inapplicable to the carrying on of the business after the date of the decree, but each partner was entitled to so much of the fund in ct. as represented his share of the capital & accumulations of interest, & the residue, if any, ought to be divided equally between them.—WATNEY v. WELLS (1867), 2 Ch. A firm of two bankers were accustomed to keep the accounts, both of the customers & of the partners, at compound interest. 1201. —— Whether capital or income.]—Partnership arts. provided that the partnership should continue for five years notwithstanding the death of any partner before the expiration of the term, that the profits should be divided annually, & that before any division of profits each partner should, at the end of each year, be credited with interest at 5 per cent. on his capital in the business at the beginning of the year. One of the partners died before the expiration of the five years :—Held : the whole of the share of deceased partner of the profits divided at the annual division next after his death was income of his estate, but the interest on his share of capital was apportionable, & so much of such interest as accrued in his lifetime was corpus & the remainder income of his estate.—IBBOTSON v. ELAM (1865), L. B. Right of Access.

1204. General rule.]—Where a partner is required, at the suit of a person entitled to ask it, to give discovery as to matters contained in the usual course of business in the partnership books, it is no excuse for his not giving that discovery to allege generally that his co-partners refuse to allow him access to the partnership books.

1205. Who may exercise right—After dissolution of partnership—Receiver appointed in action for account.]—Where a partnership has expired by effluxion of time, & in a suit for an account, etc., a receiver has been appointed before decree, the ct. will not compel deft., the former managing partner, to deliver up to the receiver, for the purpose of making out bills of costs, partnership books, & accounts, which have remained in his hands, & title deeds belonging to a third party, which came into the possession of the co-partners as solrs., such deft. offering the receiver free access thereto, & to assist in making out the bills.—DACIE v. JOHN (1824), M'Cle. 206 ; 13 Price, 446 ; 147 E. debts were all along suffered to remain in A.'s hands. All the outstanding debts were afterwards settled. In 1830, B. was declared bkpt., till which time the books were never called for by B.:—Held: A. & B. nevertheless continued tenants in common in respect of them, & the length of time did not affect that relationship; &, therefore, although there was no charge of fraud in the settled account, yet the comr. had jurisdiction to call A. before him, & examine him & the books relative to the former dealings of bkpt.

Now it is said that since that time [1820] he has never examined them, that may be, but that does not create an adverse right. If they had not been in the situation of tenants in common of this property, its remaining in the possession of an individual for a length of time might be considered as an adverse possession, so as to deprive the other party of any remedy, whatever the property might be. But here the proposition of law is, that no length of possession by a tenant in common is sufficient to deprive the co-tenant of those remedies which another party, a stranger, would have been prevented from exercising (ERSKINE, C.J.).—Re MARTINDALE, Ex p. TRUEMAN (1832), 1 Deac. & Ch. 464, Ct. of R.

1207. —— Trustee of deceased partner—Capital left in business.]—The provision is that testator is to have an examination of the books & stock whenever he likes: I am of opinion that the trustee ought not to be told that he is to have an examination every year whatever happens & that he is to have it only once a year. 1210. —— Trustee in bankruptcy of partner.]—An underwriter at Lloyd's carried on an underwriting business on behalf of himself & also on behalf of five other persons, called his "names." An agreement was entered into between him & each "name," by which it was stipulated that proper underwriting & account books should be provided & kept in the usual manner, & should at all times be open to the inspection of the "name." The "name" was to pay to the underwriter a fixed sum per annum as a remuneration for his services in conducting the business, keeping & providing books & papers, & for providing a proper office & clerical assistants, etc. The underwriter in fact kept books of account relating to the transactions in which he was jointly interested with the "names" or any of them, there being in the books six parallel columns, one for each "name," & one for the underwriter himself. The underwriter became bkpt., the books being at this time in the possession of accountants:—Held: the "names" had a joint property in the books with bkpt., & the trustee in the bkpcy. was not entitled to have the books delivered up to him, but the "names" must undertake to give to the trustee reasonable facilities for inspecting the books.—Re BURNAND, Ex p. BAKER, SUTTON & CO., [1904] 2 K. 1211. 1217. —— —— —— General statement on oath not sufficient.]—In an administration action brought by a beneficiary under the will of W. against J., his exor., & co-partner, an order was made for taking the partnership accounts as between J. & his testator's estate. Upon an application for discovery of documents in defts.' possession, J. admitted the possession of the partnership books, but claimed to seal up all entries made by him in a partnership book which he swore by his affidavit related to his own private affairs & were not material to the action:—Held: (1) it was not a case in which the oath of the person ordered to produce was conclusive as to the relevancy of the document. To exclude the right which a partner, or a representative of the partner, has to inspection of the partnership books, a general statement on oath that certain entries related to the producing party's private affairs was not sufficient. He must so far show the nature of the particular entries as to enable the party requiring production to judge whether he could safely dispense with the inspection of them, & the liberty given in the order for production must in such a case specify the particular entries which he should be allowed to seal up; (2) J. was entitled to seal up entries which he swore related only to certain trust matters & which had no relation to the partnership, & also letters to his medical man; but was not allowed to seal up entries of correspondence between him & his bankers & solrs., although in his affidavit he swore that they related only to his private affairs.—Re PICKERING, PICKERING v. PICKERING (1883), 25 Ch. On a motion by deft. for production of the books & for liberty to unseal such parts as had been sealed up, pltfs. were ordered to make a further affidavit as to whether the sealed up parts related exclusively to private matters or contained matters relating to the partnership; one of pltfs., in obedience to the order, deposed that the sealed up parts were irrelevant, & he specified the nature of the matters therein contained, & objected to further discovery:—Held: the ct. had power to unseal & to inspect the sealed up parts of the books, & the circumstances of the case justified the ct. in exercising such power.—EHRMANN v. EHRMANN,

His extrix. entered into partnership with B., & G., & carried on the business in partnership with them for fourteen years. At the end of that term the partnership was dissolved. Shortly afterwards the extrix. having discovered that B. & F. were carrying on together the business of wine merchants in the neighbourhood of the old firm, filed her bill against B., F., G., & others, alleging that under a scheme concocted by B. & G., the good will & stock-in-trade & assets belonging to the old firm had been appropriated to & used in the business of B. & F., & claiming that testator's estate was entitled to share in the profits made by B. & F. (2) Entries in the books of an incorporated co. are not evidence against a member of the co., in respect of a contract entered into by him with the co., although the act by which the co. is incorporated authorises each member to inspect & take copies of the books, or any part of them.

SECT. 13.—ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHTS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1223. Jurisdiction of court—Foreign domicil.]—The principles governing the jurisdiction of this ct. in partnership cases are analogous to the rules of the civil law. Three circumstances must be found to exist; but any one of them will support the required jurisdiction, (a) the domicil of defts. in the suit must be within the territorial jurisdiction of the court; (b) the subject-matter of the suit must also be within it; (c) the partnership contract must be entered into or be performed within that jurisdiction.

Where pltf. when residing here filed a bill against defts., who were all domiciled in Scotland, to obtain a decree for the administration of the trusts of a Scotch deed relating to a mining partnership in Scotland, so that no one of the above requisites, neither the forum domicilii, nor the forum loci rei sitæ, nor the forum contractus, existed in the case, a demurrer to pltf.'s bill for want of equity was allowed.—COOKNEY v. ANDERSON (1862), 31 Beav. 452; 1 New Rep. 77; 32 L. 1225. When proceedings stayed—Compromise of action—Repudiation.]—A partnership having, in an action brought by pltf. been by order of the ct. dissolved, pltf. & defts. signed an agreement of compromise whereby it was agreed that pltf. should be paid a sum of money for his share in the business. Pltf. subsequently repudiated the agreement & proposed to proceed with his action alleging that his signature had been obtained by fraud. On summons taken out by one of defts. & supported by co-deft.:—Held: the ct. had under Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 24 (5), (7), jurisdiction to order the stay of all further proceedings in the action.—EDEN v. NAISH (1878), 7 Ch. D. 781; 47 L. J. Ch. 325; 26 W. R. 392.

1227. —— —— As to profits—Where misrepresentation alleged.]—The power given by Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 56, refer " any question arising in any cause or matter " to an official or special reference applies only to questions which must necessarily be decided in the cause or matter & not to questions which it may prove unnecessary to decide. Such reference may be directed before the trial.

Pltf. sued for rescission of a contract of partnership between him & deft. & for damages on the ground that he had entered into the partnership on the faith of false representations made by deft. as to the amount of his professional income. Deft. by his defence denied having made any positive statement as to the amount of the income & stated that pltf. had for months before the partnership was entered into attended at his office as clerk, & had full access to the books & that pltf. had expressed himself satisfied with the business. It further appeared that pltf. had continued for nearly four years in the partnership which was then dissolved by agreement & that he had never complained to deft. of misrepresentation. The judge in chambers after notice of trial, ordered on the application of pltf. a reference as to the amount of deft.'s profits for the six years immediately preceding the partnership :—Held : the question what deft.'s profits were would be immaterial unless it was established that deft. had made a positive statement as to their amount & that pltf. had entered into the partnership in reliance on such statement & pltf. had not by his conduct lost the right to complain of misrepresentation the question referred was one which might never arise & the reference ought to be discharged.—WEED v. WARD (1889), 40 Ch. The ct. will not bind all the partners in a trading co. as to the construction of the arts. of partnership, upon a point of general interest, in a suit by some of the partners against a committee for the management of the commercial concerns, not otherwise authorised to represent the partnership.—BALDWIN v. LAWRENCE (1824), 2 Sim. & St. 18 ; 57 E. The transactions were continued a certain time, & a heavy loss incurred. A. having settled with B., & released C. & D. in respect of their several proportions, filed a bill against the representatives of E. to which B. was made a party, for an account & payment of E.'s proportion of the loss:—Held: there was nothing to distinguish this from an ordinary partnership transaction, & C. & D. were necessary parties to the suit.—HILLS v. NASH (1845), 1 Ph. 594; 15 L. Annotation:—Refd. Public Trustee v. Elder, [1926] Ch. 776.

1242. —— Action against representative of deceased partner.]—Testator was a member of a partnership at will in a bank, without any provision entitling the exor. of deceased partner to an interest in the goodwill of the concern. The credit, in which the bank was, rendered capital unnecessary, & at testator's death the property of the concern exceeded its liabilities by a very small amount, testator's share in which was far exceeded by the balance due from him to the bank on his private account, as a customer. After his death the surviving partners admitted into the firm his son, who was his exor., but who was not admitted into the firm in that character, & the business continued to be carried on without any separation or appropriation of the partnership assets as they existed at testator's death. In a suit against the exor. for the administration of testator's estate:—Held: he was not accountable to testator's estate for the profits which he had received as a partner in the bank.

It is in the first place to be borne in mind that pltf. has so constructed his suit as to preclude him from obtaining a partnership account in the cause, for which the absence from the record of C., who never was a party, & the circumstance that his estate is not represented before us, are alone a sufficient reason, if there were no other ground. That omission is not through any wish or neglect on the part of any of defts. (KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J.).

I desire on the present occasion to express very distinctly my entire concurrence in the opinion expressed in the case of Willett v. Blanford, No. 1845, post, . . . that the profits derived from the trade carried on after the death of testator must depend upon the nature of the trade, the manner of carrying it on, the capital employed, the state of the account between the partnership & deceased partner at the time of his death, & the conduct of the parties after his death. That all these may materially affect the rights of the parties. I fully adopt this view, &, applying it to the present case, I venture to say that it depends on the nature of this trade, on the capital employed from time to time in it, on the conduct of the parties, on the extent of the skill & industry of each partner employed in the concern, to what extent the profits derived from the trade ought to be attributed to the capital, & to what extent they ought to be attributed to other sources; & that, under the circumstances of this case, it would be going much too far to hold that pltf. ought to succeed in the claim which he makes for the profits derived from testator's third of this concern (TURNER, L.J.).—SIMPSON v. CHAPMAN (1853), 4 De G. partners in negotiating the terms of a lease is not entitled to stipulate clandestinely with the lessors for any private advantage to himself. Where, therefore, a sum of £12,000 was paid in pursuance of such a stipulation, the party receiving it was declared to hold it in trust for the partnership. Before the transaction was discovered, one of the partners withdrew; &, subsequently, another partner assigned a share in the stock & in his proportion of this claim to persons then admitted into the concern:—Held: the retired, the continuing, & the new partners were properly joined as co-pltfs., in a suit to have the trust declared.—FAWCETT v. WHITEHOUSE (1829), 1 Russ. & M. 132; 8 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—BREACH OF AGREEMENT TO ENTER INTO PARTNERSHIP.

1257. Right of action for breach—Non-payment of premium.]—Arts. for a co-partnership by which pltf. agreed to take deft. as a partner & give him half the interest in the lease of the house, to commence from & after Sept. 29. Deft. covenanted to pay £300 on or before that day, as a premium to be admitted a partner. On non-payment of the money at the day, pltf. may sue, averring his readiness to have taken deft. as a partner, without executing or tendering arts. of co-partnership or a conveyance of the lease.—WALKER v. HARRIS (1793), 1 Anst. 245; 145 E. R. 861.

1258. —— Specific performance.]—As a general rule, the ct. will not decree specific performance of a contract for partnership.

Where pltf.'s appropriate remedy is an action at law, where there are no legal difficulties in his way which the ct. can remove, & where there has been no part performance, the ct. will not decree specific performance of a contract for partnership.—SCOTT v. RAYMENT (1868), L. 1260. What must be proved—Terms of intended partnership.]—An action cannot be supported for breach of an agreement to become a partner generally, without proof of the specific terms of the intended partnership.—FIGES v. CUTLER (1822), 3 Stark. 139, N. P.

1261. Right to inspect partnership deed.]—Where pltf. made affidavit that he sued deft., to recover damages for a breach of agreement in not entering into partnership, pursuant to a partnership deed drawn up & signed by pltf., but remaining in the custody of deft. or his attorney; & that pltf. possessed neither copy nor counterpart of the deed; the ct. granted a rule enabling pltf. to inspect the deed & take a copy, though deft. swore he had not executed the deed. On a motion for leave to inspect a partnership deed, the affidavit should state that the party moving has neither copy nor counterpart.—MORROW v. SAUNDERS (1819), 1 Brod. & Bing. 318; 3 Moore, C. The ct. refused to order such inspection.—RATCLIFFE v. BLEASBY (1825), 3 Bing. 148; 10 Moore, C. P. 523; 3 L. J. O. S. C. P. 208; 130 E. R. 470.

1263. Defence to action—Dishonesty of plaintiff to former partner—Concealment from plaintiff.]—To an action for the breach of an agreement to enter into partnership with pltf., deft. pleaded, that, before & at the time of the making of the agreement, pltf. carried on trade in partnership with S., which partnership was then about to be wound up & dissolved; that deft. made the agreement on the faith & under the belief that pltf. had up to that time acted with honesty towards his said partner in the conduct of said business & in relation to the pecuniary affairs thereof; but that, after the making of the agreement & before breach, & before the commencement of the suit, deft. discovered that pltf. had before the time of making the agreement acted with fraud & dishonesty towards his said partner in the conduct of said business & in relation to the pecuniary affairs thereof, which said fraudulent & dishonest acts of pltf. were unknown to deft. at the time of his entering into the agreement in the declaration mentioned, wherefore deft. repudiated & declined to carry into effect said agreement:—Held: this plea afforded no answer to the action.—ANDREWES v. GARSTIN (1861), 10 C. 1264. Duty of joining partner—Not bound to inquire into truth of representation.]—Where a person has been induced to enter into a contract by a material misrepresentation of the other party, he is entitled to have the contract set aside, & not merely to have the representation made good.

PART V. SECT. 13, SUB-SECT. 3.

1258 i. Right of action for breach—Specific performance.]—The application of the doctrine of specific performance to partnerships is governed by the same rules as those which govern it in other cases. There are only two classes of cases in which specific performance of an agreement to enter into a partnership has been decreed; first, where the parties have agreed to execute some formal instrument which would confer rights that would not exist unless it was executed; secondly, where there has been an agreement which has come to an end to carry on a joint adventure, & the decree that the agreement is valid, prefaced by the declaration that the contract ought to be specifically performed, is made merely as the foundation of a decree for an account.—VIRDACHALA NATTAN v. RAMASAVAMI NAYAKAN (1862), 1 Mad. 341.—IND.

B. & W., who were partners in a bank, agree to take R. into partnership with them. W., who took no actual part in the business, & was known to R. not to do so, joined with B. in producing to R. during the negotiation, as a true account of the affairs of the bank, a paper stating the amount in which it was indebted to customers to be £11,000, the amount being in fact £26,000. R. entered into the partnership without examining the books, & continued in it for four years, taking no part in the business, & never examining the books. At the end of that time the bank turned out to be insolvent. R. then filed a bill against B. & the exors. of W., asking to have the agreement for partnership rescinded, & to have an indemnity against the debts of the concern:—Held: (1) the delivery of the paper to R. as a true account of the state of the bank was such a misrepresentation as entitled R. to have the contract rescinded; (2) the case as regarded W. was not varied by the facts that W. took no part in the affairs of the bank, & was known by R. not to do so, & did not know the representation to be untrue; (3) R.'s having brought an action against B. & W. for the misrepresentation, & recovered damages against B., did not take away his right against W.'s estate; (4) the lapse of time was no bar to pltf., for although he had means of ascertaining the representation to be untrue, he was entitled as between him & the persons who made it to believe it to be true & was not bound to make inquiry until there was something to raise suspicion.—RAWLINS v. WICKHAM (1858), 3 De G. & J. 304; 28 L. 1267. Rescission of partnership agreement—Appointment of receiver—Subsequent proof in bankruptcy of defrauding partner.]—A. induced by the fraudulent representations of B. as to the profits of his business gave him money for a share of it. On the discovery of the fraud, A. filed a bill in equity for an account, to have the partnership declared void & for a receiver. The receiver was ordered; B. becomes bkpt. Petition by A. to be admitted to prove under his commission refused, with liberty to make a claim. Although A. as against B. might have an equity to say he never was a partner, it would be difficult to say so as against third persons.—Re HOOPER, Ex p. BROOME (1811), 1 Rose, 69, L. C.

1268. —— Concealment of insolvency.] —Prisoner, by false & fraudulent representations made to the prosecutor as to his business, customers & profits induced the prosecutor to enter into a partnership with him & to advance £500 as part of the capital of the concern; & the prosecutor, after such advance, recognised & acted upon such partnership:—Held: this was not an obtaining of money by false pretences within the meaning of the statute.

I am far from saying that where a party is induced by false pretences to enter into a partnership & to advance money, the allegations being altogether fraudulent & false, or colourable merely, he might not have ground for maintaining an indictment for obtaining the money by false pretences, or from saying that he might not rescind a contract obtained by fraud. . . . If he does enter into the contract of partnership & does not rescind it, & advances money as part of the capital of the concern, he has not parted with his money within the meaning of the statute; because, being a partner, he is still interested in that money (COCKBURN, C.J.).

I am not aware of any cases in which it is held that money advanced to a concern by one of the partners in it can be treated as money obtained by another partner by false pretences (ERLE, J.).—R. v. WATSON (1857), Dears. & B. 348; 27 L. J. M. C. 18; 30 L. T. O. S. 171; 21 J. P. 823;

It turned out to be grossly inaccurate in regard to the existing liability. The ct. set aside the contract.—CHARLESWORTH v. JENNINGS (1864), 34 Beav. 96; 11 L. T. 439; 55 E. R. 569.

1272. —— Misrepresentation as to profits.]—B., a practising surgeon, took C. into partnership having represented to him that his practice produced about £700 a year. C. paid a premium. It was afterwards discovered that the practice did not amount to more than half the amount stated, & also that B. had, the year previous to the partnership, made a return to the comr. of the property tax that his income amounted only to £350 per annum. The Master of the Rolls ordered a dissolution of the partnership, & that deft. should repay pltf. half the premium he had paid:—Held: sufficient misrepresentation had been proved to uphold the decree of the ct. below.—JAUNCEY v. KNOWLES (1859), 29 L. N. was induced to enter into what was in fact a partnership with A. by misrepresentations not amounting to fraud. Not long afterwards the business, which had been carried on at a loss, was found to be insolvent:—Held: notwithstanding the insolvency, N. was entitled to a rescission of the contract, A. being restored to the sole possession of the business, which was in fact worthless when the contract was made.

In such a case there is no analogy after insolvency between the case of an ordinary partnership & that of an incorporated co.

1274. Rescission of agreement made by one partner—In fraud of others—Secret commission.]—Four out of five persons, who entered into a provisional contract to purchase a mine, which they agreed to sell for their joint benefit to a co., were deceived by the fifth. who, assuring them that the vendors would not take less than £85,714, obtained secretly from the latter an agreement, that, if the contract were perfected, & money paid he should receive thereout a bonus of £20,000 for his pains in effecting the sale. Two of the four having absolute powers from the rest to sell to the intended co., then formed themselves with others into a committee of management, &, still ignorant of the surreptitious agreement, issued a prospectus, stating, that a contract had been entered into for the purchase by the co. of the entire property for £125,000, "including all preliminary expenses, & a premium to the parties who incurred the risk & responsibility of the original purchase." The co. having been established, the requisite capital paid up, & the provisional contract perfected:—Held: the £20,000 transaction was fraudulent, & void, not only as against the four original purchasers, but also as against the co., notwithstanding the mine proved cheap at the price at which they became shareholders. It was not enough that the co. got the whole of their bargain. They had a right to the best bargain which the two members of the committee of management, had they known the facts, would have been in a position, acting fairly & rightly to give them.—BECK v. KANTOROWICZ, KANTOROWICZ v. CARTER, KALB v. KANTOROWICZ (1857), 3 K. & J. 230; 69 E. 1287. —— ——.]—There is no such principle in equity that surviving partners cannot become purchasers, from the representatives, of the share of deceased partner.

A trader directed his trustees & exors., with all convenient speed, to sell & convert into money his residuary estate, but he provided, that three or, in case of any substantial reason, seven years might be allowed for withdrawing his capital from the business in which he was a partner. Parties beneficially interested under the will, filed their bill against the surviving partners & the legal personal representatives, insisting that the administratrix had improperly allowed testator's capital to remain in the business beyond the prescribed period, & asking to have a share in the profits made while the capital remained in the business. Defts. pleaded, that before testator's death, the partners made a valuation, when the share of testator appeared to be £63,000; that a year after his death, it was agreed between the surviving partners & the administratrix, that the new firm "should take to" the whole stock on payment to her of £63,000, & should become purchasers of testator's share at that sum; that they gave her a bond for £40,000, & placed the residue at her disposal, which was drawn out from time to time at her pleasure. It appeared that the capital had not been finally withdrawn till 1845. By the plea they insisted, that they had thus become purchasers of the share, for valuable consideration & without notice of the trusts of the will:—Held: this was a valid defence to the claim to participate in the profits.—CHAMBERS v. HOWELL (1847), 11 Beav. 6; 11 L. B. proved the will, but D. did not, & he afterwards renounced by deed the office of trustee. D. purchased J.'s share of the partnership estate from B.:—Held: in the absence of proof of misrepresentation or fraud, the sale could not be avoided merely on the ground that when entered upon the purchaser might, at his option, have become a trustee of the property purchased, he not having, in point of fact, done so.—CLARK v. CLARK (1884), 9 App. Cas. 733; 53 L. 1291. —— By bankrupt partner.]—P. was engaged in a speculation in New South Wales, in partnership with M. & three other persons, M. being interested as exor. of a deceased partner. M. & F. were the London agents of the concern. In 1830 P. became bkpt., being at the time indebted to the partnership concern for advances made in respect of his share. He disputed the commission, & the concern being brought into a state of great embarrassment & difficulty by his circumstances & conduct, a deed was executed in Aug. 1829, whereby P. assigned his share to M. & F. in trust to secure the amount due from him to the concern, & subject thereto in trust for P.; & P. covenanted not to interfere in the control or management of the concern. In Dec. 1831, P., his commission still existing, agreed, with the assistance of solrs. acting on his behalf, to release his interest to his partners, in consideration of £250, but the completion of this contract was deferred by reason of the supersedeas not having been obtained. P. afterwards received £50 on account of the £250, & otherwise recognised the agreement. The agreement was, on May 2, 1836, & at his request, completed, without the intervention of any professional person on his behalf, & no further accounts & explanation appeared to have been furnished him. In May, 1839, having obtained an assignment of his interest from his assignees, he filed a bill to set aside the deeds of Aug. 1829, & May, 1836, on the grounds of fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, & the gross inadequacy of the consideration; but the ct. dismissed the bill, with costs, holding that the transactions were in themselves unobjectionable, & were dealings with the property which were not connected with any trusts between the parties, & were not to be regarded as a purchase of trust property by trustees for their own advantage, & consequently open to be impeached in a ct. of equity.—KNIGHT v. MARJORIBANKS (1849), 2 Mac. & G. 10; 2 H. & Tw. 308; 47 E. 1293. —— Necessity for full disclosure of facts known to vendor.]—(1) It is clear law that, in a transaction between co-partners for the sale by one to the other of a share in the partnership business, there is a duty resting upon the purchaser who knows, & is aware that he knows, more about the partnership accounts than the vendor, to put the vendor in possession of all material facts with reference to the partnership assets, & not to conceal what he alone knows; & that unless such information has been furnished, the sale is voidable & may be set aside.

(2) But if the vendor on discovering that certain material facts have been concealed from him by the purchaser, & though believing that there has been a concealment of further material facts nevertheless does acts constituting a election, & neither he nor his after his death can afterwards, on discovering the full extent of the concealment, repudiate the sale.

(3) There is no authority for the proposition, & it is contrary to principle, that the duty of full disclosure resting on the partner purchasing from his co-partner is such that the purchasing partner cannot rely on any binding election on the part of the selling partner unless & until full disclosure has been made.—LAW v. LAW, [1905] 1 Ch. 140; 21 T. 1326. Mortgagee of share—Of deceased partner.]—(1) A. & B. being assignees of a lease of a colliery, & working the colliery as partners in trade, A. mortgaged his share to C. & died. C. then filed his bill against B., & the exors. of A., charging that B. had excluded A. from the concern, & taken upon himself the sole management of it; & praying for an account of the profits of the concern since he had been manager, & for a receiver, & & injunction against his further interference:—Held: the bill, though filed by a mtgee., & not by an absolute assignee of A.'s share, was sustainable.

(2) If you look to the constitution of a mercantile partnership, what is the meaning of a partner mortgaging his share? Nothing more than that he covenants to pay the amount borrowed. It cannot mean that another person is, by means of such a transaction, to be forced into the partnership. This adjudication was not appealed from. The report of the assistant referee showed that large sums, forming part of the assets were in the hands of applts., & had been used by them in continuing the business for their benefit. The judge by his decree ordered these sums to be paid into ct. together with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the dissolution. Upon appeal, present applts. contended (inter alia), that the judge had no jurisdiction to refer the question as to who were the partners, & further that they should not have been ordered to pay interest:—Held: it was well settled that when on the dissolution of a firm one of the partners retained assets of the firm in his hands without any settlement of accounts & applies them in continuing the business for his own benefit, he might be ordered to account for those assets with interest thereon, & this apart from fraud or misconduct in the nature of fraud.—AHMED MUSAJI SALEJI v. HASHIM EBRAHIM SALEJI (1915), L. 1356. Practice of firm, partnership articles notwithstanding—Valuation to be at last annual rest—Arbitrary valuation.]—Where arts. of partnership have been followed by a long uninterrupted course of practice, which, though not wholly inconsistent with, is not the proper meaning & intention of, the arts., that course of practice will be held to be the practical construction of the language of the arts., as evidence of a new agreement by the partners.

Arts. of partnership provided that a valuation of stock should be taken every year, & entered in a book called the valuation & rest-book, which was to be signed by the several partners. One of the partners, who had regularly signed the books from 1831 to 1859, was absent through ill-health or bodily incapacity from the meeting in 1860, & died two months after it took place. He never expressed any dissatisfaction at the mode of making out the account:—Held: (1) the estate of deceased partner was as much bound by the settlement of 1860, as if the book had actually been signed by him; & he must be considered, in equity, as if he had signed the same.

It was the practice of the firm to set apart, every year, out of the balance, a portion which was left undivided, called (erroneously) a "sinking fund," out of which to pay contingencies-losses, & uncertain liabilities:—Held: (2) the estate of deceased partner was entitled to participate in this fund.—COVENTRY v. BARCLAY (1863), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 320; 3 New Rep. 224; 9 L. T. 496; 9 Jur. N. S. 1331; 12 W. R. 500; 46 E. R. 659, L. C.

1357. —— —— No rest for several years.]—Arts. of partnership provided that, on Dec. 31, in every year, or such other day as all the partners should agree upon, a general partnership account & rest, & a valuation & appraisement of the property & stock should be made, & signed by the partners, &, on the expiration of the partnership term, the partnership property should be realised & divided on the footing of such last annual rest; &, if any partner should die during the partnership term, his representatives should receive payment of his share of the capital & stock, as ascertained at the last annual rest, with interest thereon, in lieu of profits from that time, by instalments; & such representatives to have no right to look into the partnership books. The partnership continued for several years, but the partners did not make the annual account & rest as provided by the arts. One partner died:—Held: (1) the representatives of deceased partner were not entitled to a sale of the partnership property, as upon a dissolution; (2) the rest, & not the day of the rest, was the essence of the partnership contract; &, therefore, the representatives of deceased partner were entitled to participate in the profits up to the time of his death; & also to have the account taken, by means of the partnership books, in the usual way.—SIMMONS v. LEONARD (1844), 3 Hare, 581; 67 E. 1358. —— —— Unexpected depreciation of assets after issue of balance sheet.]—Partnership arts. provided for a balance sheet being made out up to Dec. 31 in each year, which, after a certain time, was to be binding on the partners, except that manifest errors, when discovered, should be corrected. It was also provided that a like account should be made out on Dec. 31 next after the death of a partner, & that his exors. should be entitled to receive by six instalments from the surviving partners the value of his interest as appearing from such balance sheet. The uniform practice of the firm in making out their balance sheets was to treat the loss occasioned by any asset turning out bad as attributable to the year in which it was discovered to be bad. By the partnership deed the share of deceased partner was to be taken at the value put upon it by the last balance sheet, & in the past balance sheets there was no mention of goodwill:—Held: in taking the accounts deceased partner must be credited with a share of the premises, plant, etc., at the price subsequently paid for them by the railway co., but his estate was not entitled to any share of the sum paid for goodwill.—HUNTER v. DOWLING, [1895] 2 Ch. 223; 64 L. II. Defences to Action.

(a) Accord and Satisfaction.

1365. Necessity for both accord & satisfaction.]—To a bill for an account of the dealings & transactions of a partnership, by the exors. of deceased partner, deft. pleaded that, for a certain consideration, an agreement, not in writing, was entered into between testator & himself, that all accounts between them & all claims of testator in respect of the estate, moneys & effects of the partnership, & the debts due to & from the same, should be waived:—Held: the agreement should be construed to import that deft. thereby took upon himself the discharge of the partnership liabilities, but the plea was bad, inasmuch as it did not aver that no such liabilities still remained to be discharged.

Semble: there is no rule that a release or a stated account are the only defences which can be set up by way of plea to a bill for an account.—BROWN v. PERKINS (1842), 1 Hare, 564; 11 L. J. Ch. 307; 6 Jur. 727; 66 E. R. 1155.

1369. ——.]—A partnership of a great number of persons was constituted before the passing of the Joint Stock Cos. Registration Act. The members subscribed a certain sum, & received a sort of scrip certificate, specifying the number of shares to which each was entitled. No deed was executed, nor was any register of shareholders kept. They occasionally held meetings, at one of which deft. & another person were appointed sole directors & trustees of the property of the association, which consisted of mines, plant & slaves in the Brazils. Deft. survived his co-trustee, &, disputes having arisen, a bill was filed against him by pltf., who was a derivative shareholder by purchase of one of the scrip certificates, for an account of the receipts & payments of deft., & of the debts of the assocn., & for payment of such debts, & a division of the profits, & for a receiver & injunction, but the bill did not pray for a dissolution. 1381. ——.]—The bill alleged that defts. A., B. & C. carried on business as merchants at Monte Video under the firm of A. & Co.; & at Liverpool under the firm of B. & Co.; & that the members of both firms were identical. It further alleged that certain goods, the subject-matter of the suit, were consigned to A., B. & C. to their firm of A. & Co., through their firm of B. & Co.; & that A., B. & C., as well in respect of their firm of A. & Co., as in respect of their firm of B. & Co., received these goods with full knowledge that they were pltfs.' trust property, & sold them & received the proceeds for them on that footing. Deft. C. pleaded to the whole of the bill, that he was not, & never had been, a partner in the Monte Video firm; & averred that the members of the two firms were not identical:—Held: though this plea would have been a good plea if the bill had merely sought to charge him as a partner in the Monte Video firm, yet as it contained allegations sufficient to render him liable as a partner in the Liverpool firm, the latter liability was totally uncovered by the plea, which must therefore be overruled.—ROBERTS v. LE HIR (1874), 29 L. 1382. —— Termination by forfeiture of share under partnership deed.]—(1) Where an agreement to work mines on the costbook principle has been entered into by several persons, the written statement of one of them, made subsequently to the date of the agreement, that his shares are liable to forfeiture on non-payment of calls, will not affect his rights under the agreement.

A., B., & C., in Nov. 1848, entered into an agreement to work mines on the costbook principle. A. did not pay up his calls. In a letter of Nov. 1849, to his co-adventurers, he spoke of his shares as liable to forfeiture. He received a notice of a meeting of the co-adventurers, to be held May 3, 1850, to declare his shares forfeited. He denied the right to forfeit them. The meeting was held, but instead of declaring A.'s shares forfeited, the co-adventurers passed a resolution to give him time to May 15, after which it was declared that if the calls were not paid up, the shares would be treated as forfeited. The calls were not paid on the day named, & a letter was afterwards written, stating that the shares had been forfeited on May 31:—Held: even if there had been a right of forfeiture necessarily incident to work a mine on the costbook principle, the proper steps to exercise that right had not been taken, & the shares were not forfeited.

(2) A. had, in his letter of Nov. 1849, stated that his shares were liable to forfeiture; he repeatedly afterwards denied the existence of such liability. In May, 1850, they were declared forfeited. A further correspondence ensued, in the course of which he said he should wait to enforce his rights till the profits of the mines would pay the law charges. In Aug. 1853, he filed his bill:—Held: these circumstances did not disentitle him to relief in equity, the matter in which he sought relief being one which related to an executed & not an executory interest.—CLARKE & CHAPMAN v. HART (1858), 6 H. 1383. —— Admissions sufficient for purpose of action.]—Deft. who, by answer, denies pltf.'s right to an account, but makes admissions sufficient for the purposes of the suit up to decree, cannot be required to give, by answer, further accounts. A bill was filed by one partner to set aside an agreement under which the partnership had been dissolved, & alleged that the other partner had represented a certain debt to be bad which was not so. The interrogatories asked deft. to set forth what sums he had received in respect of this debt, & also to set out the partnership accounts. Deft., by his answer as to the debt, set forth the particulars as to a patent assigned to him by debtors, & proceedings connected therewith, & said that he had received on account of his interest in the patent more than the amount of the debt;

& by his answer as to the accounts deft. said that they were very extensive, that pltf. had always access to the books, & that deft. had no means of giving the information sought except by referring to the books, & could only give the particulars required by employing an accountant, & submitted that he ought not to be obliged to set forth the accounts :—Held : the answer was sufficient.—LOCKETT v. LOCKETT (1869), 4 Ch. The partnership of A. & B. being dissolved, is succeeded by that of B. & C., who take upon themselves to adjust the affairs of the former partnership.

B. dies, & his exors. file a bill against C. for an account of the partnership dealings of B. & C.

In the progress of the suit the ct. directs the accounts of both partnerships to be taken, & C., by his answer & examination, admits that he has received a sum on account of the partnership of A. & B.:—Held: he must pay that sum into ct. notwithstanding A.'s representatives are not parties to the suit, inasmuch as he must be taken to have received it, subject to his explanation to the contrary, as surviving partner of B.—TOULMIN v. COPLAND (1837), 3 Y. & C. Ex. 643; 160 E. R. 851.

1396. ——.]—A., B., & C., being in partnership, A., who had nearly the whole of the capital, retired, taking a warrant of attorney from B. & C. to secure to him £12,500, but leaving his whole capital in the firm.

The accounts of the partnership were not then made up. Soon afterwards A., who still interfered in the business, mortgaged certain leaseholds, his private property, & certain policies of assurance on his life, for the purpose of paying off a partnership debt.

A month or two afterwards A. died, having made B. & C. his exors., & having by his will directed that they might apply the moneys to be received from the policies in carrying on the trade, provided they gave such security to his residuary legatee as W. might approve.

W. refused to act, & B. & C., without giving any security pursuant to the will, applied the money arising from the policies in discharge of the mtge.

Upon a bill filed against them by one of A.'s residuary legatees, they alleged by their answer, that A.'s share in the capital, at the time of his retirement, was far below £12,500, & that the warrant of attorney was given merely to secure what upon an account taken might be found to be his share. They admitted, however, that they had in their hands a balance of £989 belonging to A.'s estate:—Held: as between B., C., & A., the amount of the policies must, primâ facie, be taken to be a debt due from the continuing partnership to A.'s estate, & that they could only employ that money in the trade upon the terms of the will; & not having so done, they must pay the amount of that debt, namely, £7,000 as well as the £989 into ct.—COSTEKER v. HORROX (1839), 3 Y. & C. Ex. 530; 3 Jur. 996; 160 E. R. 811.

1397. ——.]—After a decree to take the accounts of a partnership, the chief clerk directed that two accountants, one of whom was employed by pltf. & the other by deft. in investigating the accounts for the purposes of the suit, should report on the accounts, showing what items were undisputed & what were disputed, & verify the report by affidavit. The accountants verified an account showing £541 due from deft. to pltf. on the undisputed items, & verified also an account of disputed items. These were items of charge against deft., so that, however they were decided upon, the £541 would not be reduced:—Held: (1) the £541 ought to be ordered into ct.; for that, although no certificate had been made, the fact that £541 at least was due from deft. was ascertained with sufficient certainty to entitle pltf. to have it ordered into ct. (2) Deft. must be taken to have admitted by his agent that at least £541 would be found due from him.

It has been held in the Ct. of Ch. for many years, that an admission by an accounting party of a sum being due is sufficient to ground an order upon him to pay the sum into ct. (JESSEL, M.R.).—LONDON SYNDICATE v. LORD (1878), 8 Ch. D. 84; 48 L. J. Ch. 57; 38 L. T. 329; 26 W. R. 427, C. A.

1398. —— Admission in error—Leave to withdraw on payment in.]—The cestui que trust under a settlement sued B. & J., who were in partnership as solrs., to recover a sum of trust money alleged to have been received by the firm & not duly invested. J. was the sole trustee of the settlement, & was in difficulties. B., by his defence, admitted that J. had paid the money into the banking account of the firm, but without B.'s knowledge; & he made a like admission in his answer to interrogatories. J. made a like admission. Upon these admissions, an order was made in chambers for B. & J. to pay the money into ct. B. moved to discharge this order so far as it affected him, on the ground that this admission had been made by mistake, & he adduced evidence which showed conclusively that the money never had come into the banking account of the firm:—Held: as the admission was shown to have been made by mistake, it was right that B. should be allowed to amend his defence for the purpose of withdrawing it; & on the materials before the ct., apart from that admission, there was no such admission by B. of receipt of the money as would justify an order on him for payment into ct.; but as on these materials there was still a strong case for contending that the firm had received the money, the order to amend ought not to have been made, except on the terms of the money being brought into ct.—HOLLIS v. BURTON, [1892] 3 Ch. 226; 67 L. 1414. —— In discretion of court.]—By arts. of partnership between three partners, on the death of any partner the survivors were entitled to take his share at a valuation. One of the partners having died, his extrix. brought her action to have it declared that the goodwill was to be included in the valuation, & to have the value of deceased partner's share in the assets ascertained. A decree was made declaring that the goodwill must be valued as part of the assets, & directing accounts. The chief clerk made his general certificate, finding (inter alia) that tow specified leaseholds belonging to the partnership were of no value. Pltf. took out a summons to vary the certificate by estimating these leaseholds as worth a considerable sum. The summons was adjourned into ct., & the judge, refused to vary certificate, but ordered the costs of both parties to be paid out of the estate :—Held : the ct. cannot make a successful deft. pay the costs of a pltf. who has wholly failed ; but it was within the discretion of the ct. to order all costs reasonably incurred in ascertaining the fund to be paid out of the fund, & an appeal would not lie.

An order for payment of costs of it [the claim] out of the estate is a discretionary order within R. S. C., Ord. 55 [now Ord. 65] & is not appealable

Consequently, where deft. rendered an account, in which he charged himself as factor for the whole & pltf. required him to furnish an account, in which he should charge himself as factor for one moiety only, & as owner of the other, & thus make himself liable to a moiety of the losses arising from the sale of the whole:—Held: the pleading of such account did not amount to a plea of plene computavit, & pltf. was entitled to his judgment quod computet.—BAXTER v. HOZIER (1839), 5 Bing. In assumpsit by one partner against another for a balance so adjusted, & not paid, the partnership still continuing, pltf.'s case rested upon a written account made out as above, but not stamped:—Held: if an action at law would lie at all on a settlement of partnership accounts which was not a final close of all the partnership transactions, still the settlement in question, not appearing to have been agreed to by the partners generally, or by pltf. & deft., could be binding only as an award; & it could not so operate for want of a 1428. Fraud—Account between surviving partner & executor.]—A bill was filed by residuary legatees against the exor. & the surviving partner of testator, for an account of the partnership transactions. It charged that an unfair valuation of the partnership stock had been made by a clerk of the surviving partner ; & that there was no settled account between the deft., or that, if any, the same was fraudulent & collusive. Deft., the surviving partner, pleaded a settled account with the exor. to the whole bill, except such parts thereof as were comprised in his answer in support of the plea, and by which he denied any fraud or collusion whatever :—Held : (1) the plea, being to part of the relief & part of the discovery, instead of to the whole of the relief & part of the discovery, was irregular in point of form, but leave was given to amend ; (2) deft. was not bound to set forth the settled account, or to aver that he had delivered up the vouchers to the exor. ; (3) though the charge of an unfair valuation of the partnership stock was not expressly denied by the answer, the plea did not, therefore, cover too much, as such a valuation might have been admitted consistently with a just final account.—DAVIES v. DAVIES (1837), 2 Keen, 534 ; 1 Jur. 446 ; 48 E. 1429. —— Account settled with item reserved.]—Accounts of long standing & great complication of a mercantile firm at Calcutta, one of the partners of whom afterwards acted as agent in England, involving charges for agency & partnership transactions, were mutually agreed to be investigated & closed. After long negotiations & discussion respecting some of the charges, an agreement was come to, the parties agreeing to strike the general balance at a given sum reserving one item of the account, amounting to a considerable sum, for future investigation. This reserved item was subsequently settled by the acceptance of a bill of exchange for a lesser amount, as such reserved item, if opened, would have disarranged the settled general account. The bill of exchange was dishonoured, & an action brought to recover the amount. A bill was then filed for an injunction, for the cancelment of the bill of exchange, & that the accounts so settled might be opened :—Held : the transaction amounted to an adjustment of the general accounts between the parties, subject to the reserved item which was ultimately settled, & the accounts so settled & closed could not, in the absence of fraud, be re-opened.—M'KELLAR v. WALLACE (1853), 8 Moo. M. died before passing his final examination in the bkpcy., & pltf., his widow, became his personal representative being also residuary legatee of his estate. The bkpcy. was superseded, & accounts were rendered between pltf. & deft., which accounts pltf. examined by means of skilled referees of her own choosing, & with the aid of an experienced solr., & also approved the same, receiving the balance & giving a formal receipt for the same. Fourteen years after the date of this receipt, she filed her bill to have the accounts retaken, alleging a fraudulent concealment from her by her referees, with the knowledge of deft., of the fact of the destruction of all vouchers for the particulars of the account some time previously to the investigation of accounts which was made by them on her behalf, & specifying two erroneous items in the accounts. The evidence of error in these items was defective : —Held : neither the alleged errors in the account, nor the alleged fraudulent concealment, being clearly made out, the ct. would not suffer the settled accounts to be reopened at this distance of time.—CUTHBERT v. EDINBOROUGH (1872), 21 W. the other partners B. & C. They next found the dubious debts to be divisible as received between the three partners; & they awarded that A. should give security for the payment of his debt by instalments; & directed B. to receive the outstanding debts & effects, & to pay all debts owing by the partnership, of whch accounts were to be stated periodically; & of the balance of receipts, special credit was to be given for A.'s share against his debt, & the remainder was to be divided between B. & C.; & any balance of payments was to be borne in the same proportions. The award was acted upon by all parties, but B. subsequently received some debts which were omitted in the accounts laid before the arbitrators, & on which their award proceeded; & he also received good debts to a larger amount than had been estimated by the arbitrators. On a bill by A. against his co-partners:—Held: he was entitled, notwithstanding the reference was of all matters in difference, to an account of the good debts received beyond the amount estimated by the arbitrators, & to an account of the receipts in respect of dubious debts; & any over receipt, in respect of good debts, ought to follow the directions of the award with respect to the dubious debts.—SPENCER v. SPENCER (1828), 2 Y. & J. 249; 148 E. 1433. —— Account taken by court.]—Where it appears clearly upon the accounts taken before the master in a suit for the administration of the estate of testator, who had been in his lifetime in partnership with deft., his exor., that an error has been committed in the accounts, & in the principle upon which they have been taken, the ct. will direct the master to review his report after the cause has been heard upon further directions, provided that error be made apparent to the satisfaction of the ct. In such case, the party requiring the indulgence must pay all costs.

The mode in which the exor.'s accounts were taken was to separate the exorship. & the partnership accounts. Deft. being the accounting party in both accounts, he had both accounts very much under his own control, & might have transferred sums from one to the other as he pleased. The errors are said to consist in the transfer of sums from one account to the other. . . . The ct. will correct an error which clearly appears to have been made in the report, even after the decree on further direction, taking care that the other party is not injured by the mistake of the party complaining of his own errors. . . . It is quite clear that if the exor. is charged with a sum derived from the partnership account, that sum should be found as an item of discharge in the partnership account. It should have been transferred from one account to the other. . . . Refer it back to the master to inquire whether any errors appear in the mode in which the two accounts of the exorship. & the partnership have been kept. The first report will stand as regular. All the expenses incurred since the first report to the present time are to be paid by deft., the exor. Both parties are to be at liberty to surcharge & falsify (LORD LYNDHURST).—EASUM v. EASUM (1847), 9 L. T. O. S. 429, L. C.

1435. —— One error proved.]—Upon the dissolution of a partnership, & the settlement of all accounts between the partners, B., the continuing partner, took some of the debts as good debts. One turned out to be bad, the securities for it having been fraudulently abstracted by a clerk:—Held: B. could not sustain a bill to rectify or set aside the settlement of accounts.—LAING v. CAMPBELL (1865), 36 Beav. 3; 55 E. 1436. —— On clear & conclusive proof.]—By a clause in arts. of partnership executed in 1878 between two brothers it was provided that on the death of either the survivor should pay to the exors. of deceased the full share to which they should be entitled on the taking of a general account in writing of the partnership assets, such stock & other assets as shall not consist of money to be valued either by mutual agreement or valuation in the usual way nothing being charged for goodwill. One brother died in 1886, & the survivor as sole exor. under his will effected the valuation as directed, paid for the share as surviving partner, & thenceforth carried on the business on his own account. In an action brought in 1908 by the residuary legatees under the will against the surviving partner in effect for an account on the footing that there had been no operative sale & purchase in 1886 by reason of the valuation then made not being in manner authorised by the clause, & that the business must be deemed to have been carried on for the benefit of both parties to the suit:—Held: on the true construction of the clause there was a binding contract of sale & purchase, & the valuation was only an incident in carrying out the same. The evidence showed that a substantially accurate method had been adopted, but even if error had been shown either in the method or the results it could not destroy the contract, but would fall to be corrected by the ct. on being clearly & conclusively proved. The price of goodwill must in any event be excluded from the valuation, & applts. could not rely exclusively on the dual character of deft. which had been imposed upon him by their own testator.—HORDERN v. HORDERN, [1910] A. 1438. —— After twenty-two years—Account of subsequent transactions decreed.]—A father & son were in partnership together. The son died, & the father furnished a statement of the partnership accounts to the extrix. of the son, which did not contain any particular items, & which showed some debts due to the partnership to be outstanding. No further accounts or information were called for, till after the death of the father, which took place twenty two years after his accounts had been furnished. An investigation of the partnership books was then made, & several errors in the furnished accounts were stated to be found. The representatives of the son then filed a bill to have the partnership accounts taken:—Held: they were barred by long acquiescence; but accounts were directed to be taken of the debts which were outstanding when the accounts were furnished by the father.—SCOTT v. MILNE (1843), 12 L. J. Ch. 233 ; 7 Jur. 709, L. C.

Separate debt between partners—Agreement for payment out of partnership funds—Whether right of action suspended.]—Pltf. & deft. being partners, & deft. being indebted to pltf. on a separate account, it was agreed between them that pltf. should take 2½ per cent. interest on his separate account for six months, from Mar. 1, 1827, & 5 per cent. afterwards ; that the partnership accounts should be made up, & the deft.'s share of the proceeds go towards the liquidation of his separate debt ; that pltf. should receive sums due to the firm, discharge partnership debts, & apply the balance towards discharging deft.'s separate debt ; that the partnership might be dissolved any Jan. 1 on six months' notice being given, but that in consequence of pltf.'s concessions as to interest, it was expected there should be no dissolution Jan. 1 next ensuing :—Held : this agreement did not suspend pltf.'s right to sue deft. for the separate debt due from him to pltf.—SIMPSON v. RACKHAM (1831), 7 Bing. 617 ; 5 Moo. & P. 612 ; 131 E. 1445. On agreement to take share at valuation—Before settlement of general account.]—Pltf. & deft. had worked a coal pit in partnership till it was exhausted, when pltf. said he would join in no more coal pits, & deft. said he should work another whether pltf. joined him or not. The materials & utensils belonging to the mine were valued, & each party was to take an article by turn, according to that valuation, till the whole was divided. The valuation was made, & it was subsequently agreed that deft. should take the whole at the valuation, & he took possession of them. The other partnership debts & credits remained unsettled :—Held : this was a transaction so separate & distinct from the general accounts, that pltf. might sue for his moiety of the value of the materials & utensils before the final settlement of the partnership accounts.—JACKSON v. STOPHERD (1834), 2 Cr. & M. 361 ; 4 Tyr. 330 ; 3 L. During their partnership, monthly accounts were made up, on each of which a balance was struck in favour of A. These balances were never carried forward from one account to another. B. had paid A. the balance on the Nov. account, which was made up to the time of the dissolution :—Held : A. might maintain an action for the balances in his favour on the Sept. & Oct. accounts.—BRIERLY v. CRIPPS (1836), 7 C. & P. 709, N. Bills of exchange—Payable at different periods.]—On a contract by a retiring partner to pay a certain sum, by bills due at different periods, two only of them having become due before action, & to execute a deed of dissolution, pltf. was held entitled to recover the whole sum, less interest, & a further sum, to be reduced to a shilling on his execution of the deed, but not the expenses of the deed.—MORLEY v. BAKER (1862), 3 F. & F. 146, N. 1462. Person entitled to an account—Servant sharing in profits.]—S., a general merchant, entered into a contract with K. that in consideration of the general services of K. in the business of S. the latter would allow him, in addition to a certain salary, a certain proportion of the net profits on all new business entered into through him.

Qu.: whether this contract was not a partnership :—Held: at any rate, K. had acquired a right as against S. to an account, & also the appointment of a receiver.

By the agreement pltf. had really become a partner with deft., & there was a want of evidence to show that, notwithstanding the terms of the agreement, there was added any clause or stipulation that pltf. should not be considered as partner. Then, if a partnership had been constituted by that agreement, there was nothing whatever in the correspondence to show that it was removed by the subsequent course of dealing between them. Without, therefore, further entering into that point, there was certainly an interest created in pltf., by virtue of his stipulated share in the profits, to know the amount of those profits, & therefore an interest to see that those things out of which the profits arose were properly managed, which in itself very much resembles a partnership interest (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—KATSCH v. SCHENCK (1849), 18 L. 1463. Solvent partner — Bankruptcy of co-partner.]—(1) Two surgeons, in consideration of £900 paid by one to the other, entered into partnership for seven years. Before the expiration of a year & a half the partner who had received the £900 became bkpt. On a bill by the solvent partner against the bkpt.'s assignee :—Held: the consideration for which the £900 had been paid having failed, pltf. entitled to an allowance of a sum proportionate to the period of the partnership which remained, with a lien for that amount on the partnership assets.

It is a settled principle, that, if money has been paid as the consideration for a contract which fails, this ct. will restore to the person who has paid the money a due proportion of it, having regard to the extent to which the consideration has failed. . . . Here, the equity sought is in administering the affairs of this partnership, which has come to an untimely end, & therefore the greater part of that for which the consideration has been paid is gone. . . . But the principle applies to a contract for a partnership as much as to any other. . . . The principle upon which the ct. interferes is, that the consideration in respect of which the money is paid fails, & is not obtained by the person who pays the money, in consequence of an unforeseen interruption (PARKER, V.-C.).

The evidence shows, that when L. received this £900 he was not in flourishing circumstances. His bkpcy. is not accounted for as having been occasioned by any sudden or unexpected loss, but by a progressive course of expenditure beyond the amount of his receipts from his practice. Nor was his bkpcy. brought about at all at the instance of his partner. Pltf. is thought entitled to a return of a proportionate part of the premium (PARKER, V.-C.).

1471. —— ——.]—(1) The mere fact of dissolution of a partnership does not give one partner an absolute right, as against his co-partners, to have a receiver appointed of the partnership business ; (2) Arts. of partnership entered into by pltf. & deft. provided that all doubts, difficulties, or divergencies that might arise between the partners during the course of the partnership, or at its liquidation or its total or partial dissolution, should be resolved & adjusted by friendly arbn. The term of the partnership had expired, & it was continued at will. Pltf. brought an action for dissolution, & moved for the appointment of a receiver & manager. Deft. moved for a stay of proceedings under Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 4 :—Held : the ct. had jurisdiction while appointing a receiver to stay all proceedings in the action except for the purpose of carrying out the order for a receiver.

I make an order referring it to chambers to appoint a fit & proper person or persons to be receiver & manager or receivers & managers, any party to be at liberty to propose himself. If B. 1475. —— Under deed of dissolution.]—(1) On the dissolution of a partnership between pltf. & deft., it was by deed agreed that the deft. should have sole management of the liquidation of the firm ; that neither of the partners should make any claim on the other of them, but deft. should pay all debts of the firm, & indemnify pltf. against the same & should also pay & account to him for the share of any dividends which might be received in respect of any debts, after all the firm debts had been paid out of the existing assets of the firm. Among the assets of the firm was a debt due from a firm in Java. A Dutch co. was formed for the purpose of taking over the property of the Java firm, subject to an arrangement being come to with the creditors of that firm to accept shares in the co. in payment or part payment of their debts. In an action by pltf. against deft. for an account of the partnership, & to restrain deft. from compromising the claim of the firm against the Java firm, the judge, made an order appointing deft. receiver, with liberty to compromise the claim in question, upon terms to be approved by the judge in chambers :—Held : there was no power, express or implied, in the deed of dissolution enabling one deft. to enter into the arrangement in question, & the ct. could not appoint deft. receiver, & give him as such receiver greater power than he had under the deed of dissolution, without the consent of pltf.

Pltf. alleged that there was a contemporaneous English agreement, but not registered in Russia, by which G. & N. agreed to compensate pltf. in the event of a dissolution within a year, under the powers reserved to them. The two partners exercised their right within the year to recall their capital, & immediately took steps to wind up the partnership in Russia. 1482. Receiver appointed with a view to winding up.]—Although an agreement to refer disputes to arbn. is, generally, no objection to a suit in a ct. of equity, yet upon the nature of the subject the management of the Opera House, & the anxious provision of the parties for arbn., the ct. refused upon motion to interfere before they had taken that course. The principle upon which a ct. of equity interferes between partners by appointing a manager, receiver, etc., is merely with a view to the relief, by winding up & disposing of the concern, & dividing the produce : not to carry it on. The ct. therefore would not upon motion appoint a manager, etc., of the Opera House, except upon the principle, applicable to any other partnership as necessary to the relief ; a foreclosure ; taking into consideration also the difficulties from the nature of the subject & the contract an anxious provision for arbn., &, that one party was by the express contract manager.—WATERS v. TAYLOR (1808), 15 Ves. 10 ; 33 E. 1483. Where grounds for dissolution.] — (1) The ct. will not, upon motion, appoint a receiver of a partnership, unless it appears that pltf. will be entitled to a dissolution at the hearing.

(2) Trifling circumstances of conduct are not sufficient to authorise the ct. to award a dissolution. It is said that pltf. has made larger advances of capital than he was bound to do, & has received none of the profits, but that is no ground for a dissolution. It is then stated that deft. has exchanged carpets for household furniture ; that may perhaps be an improper act, but still there may be a thousand reasons why the ct. should not do more than restrain him in future from so doing, & more particularly when he states in his answer, that he did it because he thought it the best thing that could be done. With respect to the books, they ought to be kept in the partnership counting house ; it is sworn that this is the case, but if that is not the case, it is no ground for dissolving the partnership, or appointing a receiver (LORD ELDON, C.).—GOODMAN v. WHITCOMB (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 589 ; 37 E. Pltf. denied the validity of these notices, & also disputed the principle upon which the last balance sheet of the profits had been taken & made up. If a partnership is continuing, or may continue, the ct. will only decree accounts to be taken.

The ship's husbands thus appointed obtained a charterparty for her, & they privately stipulated for a weekly payment, by way of commission for themselves, in addition to the weekly sum payable by the terms of the charterparty. In the month of May following, the captain, who was a part owner, had a conversation with a clerk of the charterers, in which an observation of the latter led him to suspect that there was some underhand bargain; but the subsequent part of the conversation removed the suspicion. In Oct. he acquired correct knowledge of what had been done, &, together with the other part owners, except the ship's husbands, gave the ship's husbands notice of dismissal. The ship's husbands denied the right to dismiss them, & they possessed themselves of some of the machinery of the ship, which was at an engineer's for repairs. The other part owners thereupon filed a bill, & moved for an injunction to restrain the ship's husbands from interfering with her sailing by detention of the machinery, & for a receiver of the machinery:—Held: (1) the application was not too late; &, on it appearing that a decree of possession could not be obtained in the Ct. of Admiralty, by reason of pltfs. being in possession of the hull, or at all events could not be obtained in time to enable the vessel to fulfil her engagement; (2) the Ct. of Ch. had jurisdiction upon motion to appoint a receiver of the machinery, & to direct possession of it to be delivered to him: & an order was made accordingly, the captain [who was a part owner] being appointed receiver ad interim.—BRENAN v. PRESTON (1852), 2 De G. Thus, where in 1812, the then proprietors of Covent Garden theatre executed a deed, by which they covenanted & agreed that the profits of the theatre should be exclusively appropriated to particular purposes, & that the treasurer for the time being should be irrevocably directed so to apply the profits, & in 1822, parties then entitled, under the former proprietors, to seven eighths of the theatre, entered into an agreement, which provided in some respects for a different application of the profits, & otherwise affected the rights of a party interested in the remaining eighth, who was not consulted on the subject, the ct., upon a bill filed by that party, for the specific performance of the covenants & agreements contained in the deed of 1812, appointed a receiver.

1511. Delay in winding up.]—A., B., & C. jointly undertook to execute some railway contracts. There was no deed of partnership, but A. had a letter of attorney from B. & C. authorising him to receive moneys & grant discharges. When the works had been completed but before the period of the obligation of the railway contractors to maintain the works in repair had expired C. died. At that time a large sum for extra work was due to the joint adventurers, which was the subject of a reference to the railway co.'s engineer. One year after C.'s death, the reference still pending, C.'s exor. presented a petition to the ct. alleging undue delay, & praying for the appointment of a receiver:—Held: the circumstances did not warrant the interference of the ct., & the petition dismissed with costs.—COLLINS v. YOUNG (1853), 21 L. 1512. Sufficiency to sustain interlocutory application—Failure to co-operate in management.]—Two persons carried on business in partnership as attorneys & solrs. without arts. The partners not agreeing, one served the other with a notice of immediate dissolution, & erased his name from the doors, & excluded him from the offices. The ct. restrained all such proceedings pending the winding up of the concern, & granted a receiver. The same two persons were tenants in common of a coal mine, the expenses of working which were paid out of the profits of the law partnership. The same partner excluded from the other business filed a bill for an account, & a receiver, & a manager of the mine; but the ct. refused to grant the receiver, the other partner not obstructing pltf., & the bill not praying a dissolution.—ROBERTS v. EBERHARDT (1853), Kay, 148; 2 Eq. 1516. Whether partner may be appointed — When for benefit of business.]—Under R. S. C., Ord. 52, r. 4, deft. in an action may, before judgment, apply for an injunction & a receiver.

I cannot help seeing that allowing the senior pltf. to be receiver will not seriously affect the position of the deft. as regards that point. On the other hand, if I deprive pltf. of the opportunity of being receiver, I might inflict most serious injury on the business. It has been verified by affidavit, & it is a fact so well known that I might almost take judicial notice of it, that brokers in this class of business cannot carry on the business at all without pledging their personal credit to their bankers. You cannot get an indifferent person as receiver to take such an onerous duty upon himself. The only person willing to undertake it would be, no doubt, a person largely interested in the success of the business, which senior pltf. is, I think; therefore, there are in this case sufficient grounds for making an exception to the general rule, & I shall give senior pltf. liberty to propose himself as receiver (JESSEL, M.R.).—SARGANT v. READ (1876), 1 Ch. The partnership firm consisted of a father & his three sons, of whom deft. was the youngest. The whole of the capital was provided by the father. In June, 1892, the father & the two elder sons became bkpt., & the trustees in their bkpcy. brought an action against deft. for a declaration that the provisions of the arts. under which deft. claimed to retain as a loan the respective shares of bkpts. in the capital of the partnership were void as against creditors of bkpts., & moved for the appointment of a receiver & manager of the partnership business. Deft claimed the right, as solvent partner, to be appointed receiver & manager:—Held: deft. was entitled to be appointed receiver & manager; but that he must give security, pass his accounts, furnish pltfs. with proper accounts, allow them all reasonable access to the books, & pay the balances in his hands, as & when they reached a certain amount to be agreed upon, into ct., or into a joint banking account of pltfs. & himself.—COLLINS v. BARKER, [1893] 1 Ch. 578; 62 L. Pltf. obtained an order appointing a receiver & manager of the business, who dismissed deft. from the management, & afterwards an order was made for the dissolution of the partnership, the taking of the partnership accounts, & the realisation of the partnership effects. Deft set up & managed a rival business under a similar name, which he alleged belonged to his sons as partners, & for which his wife & her sisters advanced the capital. On a motion by pltf. for an injunction to restrain deft. from interfering with the management of the old business by the receiver & manager, it was proved that deft. had spread rumours to the effect that the old business would shortly be closed & sold by auction, & had induced some of the employees of the old business to leave, after giving due notice, & to enter the employment of the new business, & also had attempted to obtain from the landlord the tenancy of a field which had long been in the occupation of the old partnership, & used in the old business:—Held: (1) any act calculated to injure property under the control of the receiver & manager was an interference with the management of the receiver & manager, whom the ct. was bound to protect; (2) & an injunction was granted restraining deft. from interfering with the management of the receiver & manager.—DIXON v. DIXON, [1904] 1 Ch. 161; 73 L. 1579. Exclusion of name on manufactures of partnership.]—By arts. of partnership, the partnership, which was for twenty-one years, was to be carried on for the first fourteen years under the style of A. & co., & for the last seven [years] under the style of A. & B. During the first fourteen years, & for rather more than a year afterwards, the name of A. alone was stamped upon certain manufactures of the partnership. An injunction, restraining the use of the name of A. upon the goods, or of any other name than that of A. & B., for the remainder of the term, refused.—POWELL v. ALLARTON (1835), 4 L. J. Ch. 91.

1580. Participation in manufacture of patent.]—(1) Semble: If a partner in a business, in which a secret process of manufacture & composition of materials is used, who has not, under the partnership contract, a right to the knowledge of the secret, should openly take part in the manufacture, & should, with the knowledge & concurrence of his partners, be permitted to acquire a knowledge of the process & ingredients, the other partners will be considered to have waived a right to the preservation of the secret for their separate benefit.

(2) The injunction restrained the sale of medicine by deft. under the name of the medicine prepared according to the secret prescription, not on the ground of the use of the name alone, but because it was by the use of the name that deft. was availing himself of the breach of faith & contract. Qu.: whether, apart from that ground of interference, the ct. would have restrained the use of the name before pltf.'s right had been established at law.

(3) Bonds executed by partners to each other, relating to their rights as partners, of the same date as the partnership deed, read with the deed as part of the partnership contract.

(4) The payment of the expenses of advertisements out of partnership funds is not necessarily a ground for giving to each partner, at the expiration of the partnership, a continuing share in the advantages of publicity produced by the advertisement; the partnership having had, during its continuance, the benefit of the expenditure.—MORISON v. MOAT (1851), 9 Hare, 241; 20 L. (2) There is one case which is constantly occurring, that of a partner raising money for his private use on the credit of the partnership firm; & the ct. interferes then because there is a ground for dissolving the partnership; but then the danger must be such, there must be that abuse of good faith between the members of the partnership, that the ct. will try the question whether the partnership should not be dissolved in consequence (LORD ELDON, C.).—MARSHALL v. COLMAN (1820), 2 Jac. & W. 266; 37 E. (d) Bankruptcy of One Partner.

1590. Interference with property by trustee in bankruptcy—Sale.]—On a separate commission against one partner, the assignees took possession of the partnership property, & were about to sell it. Injunction, on filing of bill & affidavit, granted to restrain the sale.—ALLEN v. KILBRE (1819), 4 Madd. 464; 56 E. R. 776.

1591. ——.]—Thirteen persons became members of a joint stock co., & executed a deed of partnership, by which it was provided, "that the affairs of the co. should be conducted by a board of directors; that the assignees of any bkpt. or insolvent proprietor should not, in that capacity, be proprietors in respect of any shares which belonged to such bkpt. or insolvent, but might procure some person to become a proprietor in respect of such shares; & that all dividends & other profits which might be declared or appropriated on any shares of any bkpt. or insolvent proprietor in the interval between the time of his bkpcy., & of some person becoming a proprietor of such shares should not be received; neither, during such interval, should the rights & privileges attending such shares, be exercised by any person whomsoever, but the same should remain in suspense; & as soon as any person should become a proprietor of such shares, then the assignee of such bkpt. or insolvent proprietor should be entitled to receive the dividends & other profits which might have been suspended." The business was carried on under the terms of the partnership deed, & shortly after the date thereof the sheriff seized in execution the effects of the co. on their premises, under a judgment obtained against one of the proprietors by separate creditor of such proprietor, with the purpose of selling his interest, but before any sale took place, & whilst the sheriff was in possession of the co.'s effects, the proprietor became bkpt., & A., who was chosen his assignee, entered, by means of the messenger appointed under the fiat, into possession of the co.'s effects, & interfered with the management thereof. In the meantime, the sheriff sold to one of the other proprietors the effects seized by him under the execution, at the suit of separate creditor—Held: the solvent proprietors were entitled to an injunction against the assignee of bkpt. proprietor, to restrain him from interfering with the partnership property, or with the management of the business of the partnership. The solvent proprietors being entitled to the possession of the partnership property & effects, a manager or receiver was refused.—FRANCIS v. SPITTLE (1840), 9 L. J. Ch. 230, L. C.

1594. Delivery of firm letters to continuing partner.]—There had been an omission to make any stipulation as to the delivery of the letters & what has been done by deft. in telling the postmaster that the firm has been dissolved is not such an interference with the rights of pltf. as will justify the ct. in granting an injunction (STIRLING, J.).—PATCHING v. JORDAN (1888), 4 T. 1598. Partnership disputed.]—Both parties ordered to be examined upon the trial of an issue, directed upon a motion for an injunction, supported by pltf.'s affidavit, & opposed upon the affidavit of deft. contradicting it.

Pltf. represented that the person carrying on this concern as his own was really carrying on a partnership concern. Deft. denied the partnership stating himself to be solely interested. In such a state of things the ct. could only be neuter, & granting an issue was more favourable to pltf. . . . It was very fit that the jury should try the credit of these parties (LORD ELDON, C.).—DE TASTET v. BORDENAVE (1822), Jac. 516; 37 E. R. 945, L. C.

1600. —— Breach of agreement between partner & third parties.]—Where an agreement had been entered into between A. & B., who were partners without any written arts., & persons in their employ, containing terms & provisions of a harsh description, & where one of the partners had filed a bill against the other for a dissolution of the partnership, the ct. refused to interfere, at the suit of the other partner, to restrain the breach of the negative terms of the agreement.—CROFT v. HAW (1836), Donnelly, 82; 5 L. J. Ch. 305; 47 E. R. 241.

1601. —— Issue of circulars—Relating to infringement of patent.]—A. & B. entered into partnership for the purpose of working a patent taken out by B., the partnership deed providing that the patent rights should belong solely to B. During the continuance of the partnership the partners issued circulars asserting the validity of the patent, & warning the public against its infringement, although they had been advised that the patent was in fact void. The partnership having continued for seven years, was dissolved by deed, & A. & B. each proceeded to manufacture the patented articles for himself; but shortly afterwards B. commenced issuing circulars to A.'s customers, asserting that A. was infringing his patent, & threatening them with legal proceedings in case they purchased from A. A. then moved for an injunction to restrain B. from issuing these circulars, contending that, the patent being void, he had an equal right with B. to manufacture the articles intended to be protected by it:—Held: although A. had, during the continuance of the partnership, precluded himself from disputing the validity of the patent, yet, after the expiration of the partnership, he was as much at liberty as any other person to dispute its validity, & B.'s proper course for asserting his claim to the patent was, instead of issuing the circulars complained of, to have instituted proceedings against A. to establish its validity. On B. declining to undertake to institute any such proceedings, the ct. granted the injunction.—AXMANN v. LUND (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 330; 43 L. J. Ch. 655; 31 L. T. 119; 22 W. R. 789.

1602. R. 687.

1603. Applicant guilty of improper conduct.]—Qu.: whether a partnership for an indefinite time, without deed, can be dissolved on notice by either party.

Where deft. in a suit, founded on charges of misconduct, for an account & a dissolution of the partnership & for an injunction to restrain him from receiving debts, drawing bills, etc., or further interfering in the partnership concern, denied or explained facts of appropriation to his own use of debts received by him from persons indebted to the concern, & alleged that he could not put in his answer to the bill because pltf. had possessed himself of the partnership books, & carried them away from the partnership premises, the ct. would not even grant the injunction, on the ground of pltf. having acted improperly. In refusing such an application, however, the ct. did so expressly without prejudice to any future application.—LITTLEWOOD v. CALDWELL (1822), 11 Price, 97; 147 E. R. 413.

1608. —— On behalf of new firm.]—A between M. & C. who carried on the business of wine merchants, having determined at the end of seven years by effluxion of time, & M. being entitled to the goodwill, C. proposed to issue a circular to all the customers of the firm & the trade generally, which, after announcing that he had joined another firm of wine merchants, & drawing attention to one of their circulars which was annexed, continued, "I take this opportunity to thank you for your valued support during the last seven years, & to solicit a continuance of the same in future." The annexed circular was an announcement by F. & co., an old established firm of wine merchants, that C. had joined their firm, & concluded as follows: "Thanking you for your support in the past, & soliciting a continuance in the future, to the new firm." M. having objected to these circulars being issued, C. proposed to omit the words "& to solicit a continuance of the same in future":—Held: the circulars amounted to a suggestion that the new firm were the successors in trade of the old firm, & C. must be restrained from issuing either of the three, & from applying to any person who was a customer or correspondent of the old firm & asking them to deal with him or not to deal with M.—MOGFORD v. COURTENAY (1881), 45 L. J. Ch. 540; 90 L. T. 479.

1611. —— Though articles permit setting up business.]—One of two partners bought out the other under their arts. The arts. provided that the outgoing partner might set up a similar business in the neighbourhood:—Held: the proviso was merely declaratory, & did not authorise solicitation of old customers.—GILLINGHAM v. BEDDOW, [1900] 2 Ch. 242; 69 L. 1613. —— Though goodwill not specifically mentioned.]—A. & B. had formerly carried on business in partnership & B. had brought an action for rescission of the partnership on the ground of misrepresentations by A. This action was compromised on the terms that judgment should be entered for B. for £1,200, the partnership to be dissolved, A. retaining the "assets." The goodwill was not specifically mentioned in the terms of the compromise. A. subsequently brought another action to restrain B. from canvassing the customers of the old firm. Upon motion for an interlocutory injunction:—Held: the relations of vendor & purchaser existed between the parties, B. was subject to the ordinary obligations of a vendor, & consequently, upon the authority of Trego v. Hunt, No. 1211, ante, was entitled to an injunction.—JENNINGS v. JENNINGS, [1898] 1 Ch. 378; 67 L. 1614. Executors of deceased partner restrained.]—The rule laid down in Trego v. Hunt, No. 1211, ante, that a vendor of the goodwill of a business is not entitled to solicit its customers extends to a vendor's exors. carrying out a contract for the sale of the goodwill, the exor. will be restrained at the suit of the purchaser from soliciting customers of the business.

Where therefore a deed of partnership provided that on the death of a partner the surviving partner should acquire deceased partner's share of the capital property & assets of the partnership business, or alternatively that the surviving partner might elect to have the whole of the assets of the partnership realised & divided, an injunction was granted at the instance of the surviving partner to restrain an exor. of deceased partner from soliciting customers of the firm.—BOORNE v. WICKER, [1927] 1 Ch. 667; sub nom. BORNE v. WICKER, 71 Sol. 1615. Whether restrained by injunction—Use by surviving partner—Of deceased partner's name.]—WEBSTER v. WEBSTER, No. 595, ante.

1616. —— —— Of firm name—Use likely to appropriate goodwill.]—L. & D. formerly carried on business as co-partners under the style of L. & D. On the death of L. in 1876 D. & M. entered into partnership under arts. whereby it was provided that the style of the firm should be the same as before, namely, L. & D.; &, amongst other things, that "in case of the death of one of the partners a general account of the position shall be made, including all effects & securities of whatsoever nature that they possess, & the value of such effects & securities be estimated as at the date of such decease." There was also a provision for the appointment of an appraiser. The partnership expired by the death of D. in 1896, whereupon an appraiser was agreed upon between D.'s personal representative & M., who subsequently appointed the same person arbitrator. Questions arose before the arbitrator whether he ought to consider the question of goodwill & set a value thereon, & whether in considering the goodwill he should appraise the value thereof on the footing that, if it were sold, M. would be at liberty to carry on a rival business, but without any right to solicit customers of the old firm, & whether or not under the name of L. & D. The arbitrator stated a special case for the opinion of the ct. in accordance with Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 19:—Held: the arbitrator ought to consider the question of goodwill, if any, & to set such a value upon it as he might consider to have been attached to the business at the death of D., & the value, if any, of the goodwill ought to be appraised on the footing that, if it were sold, the surviving partner would be at liberty to carry on a rival business, but would not have the right to solicit any person who was a customer of the old firm prior to the death of D., or the right to carry on business under the name of L. & D.

The goodwill of the business would be an asset, & might well be the most valuable asset of the partnership. The exors., therefore, in the absence of special provisions in the partnership contract, would be entitled to require that the goodwill should be sold together with the other assets for the purposes of division between the exors. & the surviving partner (ROMER, J.).

Though a surviving partner is within his rights in carrying on a similar or rival business, he could, in my opinion, be restrained from carrying on that rival business in the name of the partnership firm so as to lead to the belief that he was carrying on the partnership business, or so as otherwise to appropriate to himself the goodwill of that business (ROMER, J.).—Re DAVID & MATTHEWS, [1899] 1 Ch. 378; 68 L. Use not exposing other partner to risk—Appreciable risk in business sense.]—Upon the dissolution of a partnership, without any sale or assignment of the goodwill of the business, & without any provision as to the use of the firm name, each of the partners is entitled to carry on business under that name, provided that he does not by so doing expose his former partners to any risk of liability. Whether there will be any such risk is a matter to be determined having regard to the circumstances of each case.

In 1882, a partnership of solrs. was constituted, the partners being W. B. the elder, W. B. the younger, deft. W., & pltfs., J. B. & C. B., & they carried on business under the style of "Burchell & co." In June, 1893, W. B. the elder having died & W. B. the younger having retired, pltfs. & deft. W. agreed to continue in partnership under the style of "Burchell & co." In 1899, the partnership was dissolved by consent, there being no sale of the goodwill or assets & no provision as to the use of the firm name. Pltfs. then proceeded to carry on business at the old office as "Burchells & co." & deft. W. & his son, whom he had taken into partnership, at new offices as "Burchell & co."

Pltfs. claimed the exclusive right to use the name "Burchell" or "Burchells," & to restrain defts. from using either of those names in any way as part of their firm name:—Held: subject to the above limitation, defts. were entitled to use the name "Burchell & co.," though it would be more satisfactory if they would undertake to continue to use the name "Burchell, Wilde & co."

The case of Banks v. Gibson, No. 1618, ante, must be read subject to the qualification that use of the old name must not expose the other partners to liability.—BURCHELL v. WILDE, [1900] 1 Ch. 551; 69 L. J. Ch. 314; 82 L. T. 576; 48 W. R. 491; 16 T. L. R. 257, C. A.

1622. —— Use by continuing partner.]—Two ladies, C. & W., carried on business in London in partnership under the firm of C. & W. C. married L. After this a decree for dissolution was made, & it was ordered that "the said partnership business, & the leasehold premises, trade fixtures, stock-in-trade, goodwill, & business," should be sold as a going concern to W. or to L. & wife, whichever should be the highest bidder. W. became the purchaser of all the property directed to be sold. L. & wife, who carried on business in Paris under the firm of C. et Cie., commenced action to restrain W. from carrying on the business under the style or firm of C. & W.:—Held: L. & wife had no right to restrain W. from using the name of the old firm.

The assignment of the goodwill & business included the exclusive right to use the name of the old firm.—LEVY v. WALKER (1879), 10 Ch. D. 436; 48 L. J. Ch. 273; 39 L. T. 654; 27 W. R. 370, C. A.

1623. —— Use by retired partner—Suggesting connection with old firm.]—A trader, who has been a manager or a partner in a firm of established reputation, has a right, on setting up an independent business, to make known to the public that he has been with that firm; but he must take care not to do so in a way calculated to lead the public to believe that he is carrying on the business of the old firm, or is in any way connected with it.

Pltf., an old established tailor, took deft., who had been his foreman, into partnership, & the business was carried on under the name of H. & P. The partnership was afterwards dissolved by a decree of the ct., in which it was provided that the business of the partnership should belong to pltf. Pltf. accordingly kept up the shop under the name of H. & Co. Subsequently deft. set up a shop only a few doors from pltf.'s shop, & painted over the door the words "P., from H. & P.":—Held: having regard to the manner in which the names were painted up, deft. had done that which was calculated to lead the public to suppose that he was still connected with the old firm, & pltf. was entitled to an injunction.—HOOKHAM v. POTTAGE (1872), 8 Ch. It was also agreed that an equal division should be made of the partnership effects, & that neither of the partners should apply any part of the co-partnership moneys or effects for his own private use until such division as aforesaid. A renewed lease of the property at N. was afterwards obtained by deft. to himself alone. The partnership for the first two years proved a dead loss, & the drawings, consequently, came out of the capital. Pltf. wished for an immediate dissolution, but deft. wished to carry on the partnership a little longer. Pltf. commenced an action for dissolution, & applied for an interim injunction to restrain deft. from drawing out of the capital until the hearing : —Held : the drawing out of capital was, notwithstanding the proviso for repayment at the end of the partnership, such misconduct within the partnership arts. as justified the ct. in granting the injunction, but pltf. also must undertake not to draw out of capital.—LEMANN v. BERGER (1876), 34 L. Notice in terms of articles—Right to countermand.]—Pltf. & deft. carried on the business of surgeons as partners under arts. of partnership, which provided (inter alia) that "in case either of the partners should be desirous of retiring, & should give twelve calendar months' notice in writing of such his desire to the other partner, the continuing partner should have the option of becoming the purchaser of the share of the retiring partner, for a sum equal to two years' purchase of the share of said retiring partner in the net annual profits of the business, provided such option were exercised within one calendar month from the receipt by him of such notice of retirement"; & they also stipulated that "each of the partners should employ himself assiduously in the business & concerns of the said partnership business, & use his utmost skill, care & diligence to promote & increase the same, & that if either of the partners should commit any breach of any of the covenants & agreements therein contained, & on his part to be respectively observed & performed, then & in any of such cases the other of said partners, if he should think fit, should be at liberty to dissolve said partnership by giving the party offending notice in writing, declaring the partnership to be dissolved & determined." On Aug. 15, 1856, deft. served upon pltf. the proper notice, under the arts., of his intention to retire from the business. Disputes having then arisen as to the conduct of certain portions of the business calculated greatly to reduce the value of the annual profits of the concern, deft., on Sept. 13, 1856, having previously received notice, through his solr., that pltf. intended to exercise the option given him to purchase deft.'s share of the business, under the arts., served upon pltf. notice of a dissolution of the partnership, on the ground of an alleged breach, by pltf., of the stipulations of the arts. Later, on the same day, pltf. served notice, under the arts., of his intention to exercise his option of purchase, in accordance with the intimation he had previously given to deft.'s solr:—Held: the evidence failing to show an actual violation of any stipulation of the partnership arts. by pltf., deft. was not entitled to a dissolution under the arts., & the partnership business must be continued to be carried on, at whatever inconvenience, till the expiration of the twelve months after service of pltf.'s notice of purchase.—WARDER v. STILWELL (1856), 26 L. J. Ch. 373; 28 L. T. O. S. 366; 3 Jur. N. S. 9; 5 W. R. 174.

1650. —— Expiry of time stipulated—Date of dissolution.]—By partnership arts., one of three partners might "determine the co-partnership by giving six calendar months' notice"; & in that case, immediately after the expiration of the six calendar months, the assets were to be valued, & after the valuation being made & the result communicated, the partnership "shall, in regard to all the said partners, cease & determine":—Held: the partnership was dissolved at the expiration of the six months, & not from the completion of the valuation, though it continued after the six months, for the purpose of winding it up.—GRIFFITHS v. BRACEWELL (1865), 35 Beav. 43; 55 E. to its duration, executed a deed dissolving the co., & left a notice of it at the co.'s office. They then filed a bill, on behalf of themselves & all other members except defts. against the officers of the co., alleging that the co. consisted of upwards of four hundred members, & that pltfs. were ignorant of & had no means of learning their names & residences, & praying that the co. might be declared to be dissolved :—Held : all the members ought to have been served with notice of the deed.—WHEELER v. VAN WART (1838), 9 Sim. 193 ; 2 Jur. 252 ; 59 E. 1653. Waiver of notice—By subsequent negotiations.]—Deft. B., & other defts., having bought an estate, obtained from the Bishop of Durham a lease for twenty-one years of land adjoining, called the Byers Green Coal Royalty, & commenced working same under the name of the Byers Green Coal co. In Mar. 1839, they signed an agreement that they should be entitled to the land so purchased in equal shares, & also to the Byers Green Royalty, in equal shares ; & that each party should participate in the advantages or losses to be derived from the purchase & the said royalty, etc., & that any money paid for the same estate or royalty, or respecting the winning of any colliery by any of the said parties, should carry interest until the repayment. B. having refused to pay up his calls, to sign a partnership deed, & also to concur in borrowing money, the other partners, in Feb. 1841, served him with a notice that they would no longer continue partners with him, & that he was to consider the partnership between them entirely dissolved, & they offered to pay him back the sum of £850, previously advanced by him, with interest. This sum was not paid, & negotiations afterwards took place between the parties respecting the payment of the sum, & other compensation to B., & as to the terms of the dissolution. A treaty was also entered into by one of the partners, for the purchase of B.'s interest in the colliery. An action having been brought against B. & the other partners on a bill of exchange accepted in the name of the firm, to which deft. B. pleaded non accepit, the judge told the jury that the partnership contract was for twenty-one years, & could not be dissolved by the notice :—Held : this was a misdirection, the partnership being indefinite ; & the question for the jury was, whether, after it had been dissolved by the notice, the parties came to a new agreement to carry on the concern together as partners.—LAYCOCK v. BULMER (1844), 13 L. J. Ex. 156 ; 2 L. T. O. S. 101, 332.

1654. Effect of valid notice—Partner a trespasser—On partnership premises leased by other partner.]—In Sept. 1846, a partnership was entered into between A. & B. the terms of which were never definitively arranged. The business continued to be carried on, in the names of A. & B. in a shop & counting house forming part of a house of which A. was lessee, down to Dec. 25, when A. caused B. to be served with a notice to dissolve the partnership. On Jan. 2, 1847, B. broke & entered the shop & counting house :—Held : he was liable in trespass ; his right to the occupation of the premises having ceased with the determination of the partnership.—BENHAM v. GRAY (1847), 5 C. 1655. Withdrawal of notice—Whether permissible—Without consent of partner notified.]—Arts. of partnership between pltf. & deft. provided that either partner should be at liberty to determine the partnership at the end of the first seven years of the term, on giving previous notice to the other partner of his intention to do so. Pltf. having become insane, deft. served on him notice of his intention to determine the partnership at the end of the first seven years of the term :—Held : the notice could not be withdrawn without the consent of pltf.

If the first notice put an end to the partnership, it altered the position of the parties ; & how could a man without the consent of the other party say, I will become a partner again ? It is totally impossible that, after a notice of that kind has been given, one party alone could withdraw it, without the consent of the other & enter into a partnership again. In my opinion, there is no such power of withdrawal as is claimed by deft. ; & if the first notice were valid, that notice remains unaffected by the attempt to withdraw it (JESSEL, M.R.).—JONES v. LLOYD (1874), L. (2) Arts. of partnership provided that a partner might be expelled for breach of certain acts therein specified, & that if any question should arise whether a case had happened to authorise the exercise of this power, such question should be referred to arbn. Defts. served a notice on pltf. to determine the partnership on the ground that he had committed a breach within the expulsion clause, but gave no details of the particular act complained of; pltf. thereupon brought an action to restrain defts. from acting on this notice; defts. moved to stay proceedings & refer all matters in dispute to arbn.:—Held: the preliminary question whether or not the notice of expulsion was valid was one more suitable for decision by the ct. than by an arbitrator, & as there was a suggestion of a fraudulent exercise of the power of expulsion, the ct., in the exercise of its discretion, ought not to stay proceedings & enforce a reference.—BARNES v. YOUNGS, [1898] 1 Ch. 414; 67 L. 1682. —— Power vested in one partner—By articles.]—Partnership arts. between A. & B. provided that, if the business should not be conducted to the satisfaction of B., he should have power to give notice to A., to determine the partnership; the arts. also contained an arbn. clause providing that any differences in relation to the partnership should be referred to arbn. B. having given notice to A. for the partnership to be determined, A. brought an action against B., alleging various charges of fraud, & claiming that the notice should be declared void, & that B. should be restrained from announcing the dissolution of the partnership, whereupon B. moved that the matters in question should be referred to arbn.:—Held: (1) the power to give the notice under the arts. was exercisable by B. at his own will & pleasure; (2) A. having, in the judgment of the ct., failed to establish a primâ facie case of fraud, the matters in question should be referred to arbn. according to the arts.—RUSSELL v. RUSSELL (1880), 14 Ch. 1683. —— Irregularities in accounts.] — The failure of one partner to enter in his accounts partnership moneys received by him is, of itself & independent of any provisions in the arts. of partnership, a sufficient ground for the other partner dissolving.

By arts. of a partnership for a term, each partner was to keep proper books of account & to enter all his receipts, & in default the other might dissolve the partnership. One partner had made small omissions in seventeen instances, which, in the aggregate, amounted to £9 10*s.*:—Held: this justified the other in dissolving the partnership.—CHEESMAN v. PRICE (1865), 35 Beav. 142; 55 E. R. 849.

1684. Expulsion for dishonesty—Conviction for dishonesty.]—Arts. of partnership provided that in the event of either of the junior partners being "addicted to scandalous conduct detrimental to the partnership business," or being guilty of "any flagrant breach of the duties of a partner," the senior partner might give the offending partner six days' notice of expulsion from the partnership. One of the junior partners having been convicted by a police magistrate of travelling without a ticket with intent to avoid payment, & fined the full penalty, the senior partner served him with notice of expulsion. On motion by the junior partner for an interim injunction to restrain his expulsion:—Held: as pltf. had been convicted of dishonesty, the notice of expulsion was justified, & under the circumstances the ct. declined to interfere by interlocutory injunction.—CARMICHAEL v. EVANS, [1904] 1 Ch. 486; 73 L. J. Ch. 329; 90 L. T. 573; 20 T. L. R. 267.

1687. —— Avoidance of notice & restraint of proceedings.]—W. & C. entered into co-partnership for a term of twenty-one years in the trade of millstone makers, C. being besides cashier of the firm. Disputes of old standing existed between the partners at the commencement of the co-partnership & ill temper was exhibited on frequent occasions between them afterwards. Deft. C. notified him that he must leave the firm & to avoid publicity he consented to an immediate dissolution which was advertised as a dissolution by mutual consent:—Held: the action of defts. in advertising that the dissolution was by mutual consent did not preclude them from showing that it took place in consequence of misconduct of the retiring partner.—O'KEEFE v. CURRAN (1889), 17 S. C. R. 596.—CAN.

ultimately, & within a year from the commencement of the partnership term, took proceedings to determine the co-partnership by notice under the expulsion clause, upon the ground of pltf. W.'s alleged violations of the partnership arts. in six particular items, which were specified in a notice to pltf., dated in Mar. 1871. Pltf. filed his bill to restrain deft. from proceeding further with that notice, & to have such notice declared void. Deft. afterwards took proceedings under the arbn. clause, & pltf. amended his bill for the purpose of restraining these latter proceedings also. The particular alleged violations were explained away upon the evidence as entire mistakes on deft.'s part attributable to the previous state of feeling existing between the partners:—Held: (1) pltf. W. was entitled to have the notice of dissolution declared void, & all proceedings upon such notice restrained; (2) deft. must be restrained from proceeding under the arbn. clause.—WITT v. CORCORAN (1872), 21 W. Deft. became an incurable lunatic on his way to India. He arrived there in 1841, & was sent back:—Held: this art. contemplated a dissolution; according to the fair meaning of the art., the event had happened, & his partners were entitled to a dissolution as from the end of the partnership year 1842, & not, as contended by defts., from the decree.—BAGSHAW v. PARKER (1847), 10 Beav. 532; 50 E. 1701. —— —— ——.]—In a bill for the dissolution of a partnership at will carried on upon the terms of an indenture after the expiration of the period fixed by the indenture pltf. alleged that disputes had arisen between himself & deft., his partner, & prayed for a dissolution of the partnership, the realisation of the assets, & the appointment of a receiver. Deft. put in a plea stating that one of the clauses of the indenture provided that in case any difference should at any time during the partnership, or after the expiration thereof, arise between the partners, the same should be referred to arbn., & neither of the partners should proceed against the other at law or in equity until the reference, & that the award should be made a rule of the Ct. of Q. B. The plea was overruled on the grounds that the clause did not contemplate the entire dissolution of the partnership, which could not be considered as a matter in dispute; & that much of what was prayed by the bill was dehors the arbn. clause.—WOOD v. ROBSON (1867), 15 W. R. 756.

Annotation:—Refd. Donnchy v. Jolly (1874), 22 W. R. 449.

1702. —— —— ——.]—The arts. of partnership entered into between pltf. & deft. provided that, if, during the continuance of the partnership, or at any time afterwards, any difference should arise between the partners in regard to the construction of any of the arts., or to any division, act, or thing made or done in pursuance thereof, or to any other matter or thing relating to the partnership or the affairs thereof, such difference should be referred to arbn. During the continuance of the partnership pltf. commenced an action against deft. for dissolution of the partnership on the ground that deft. had misappropriated partnership moneys & otherwise acted in breach of the partnership arts. Deft. thereupon applied for & obtained an order under Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 4, that the action should be stayed & the matters in difference referred to arbn.:—Held: (1) the arbn. clause in the arts. on its true construction was sufficient to cover a question of dissolution; &, on a reference under that clause, the arbitrators could, if they thought fit, award a dissolution; (2) the judge of the ct. below had nevertheless a discretion to grant or to refuse the application for an order to stay the action; & the Ct. of Appeal would not ordinarily interfere with the exercise of such discretion.—WALMSLEY v. WHITE (1892), 67 L. 1703. —— —— ——.]—The arbn. clause in partnership arts. provided for the reference to arbn. of any difference between the partners as to the construction of any of the arts., "or as to any division, act or thing to be made or done in pursuance thereof, or to any other matter or thing relating to the partnership or the affairs thereof," but made no express provision for the reference to arbn. of any question as to the return of the premium paid as the consideration for the partnership. In a dissolution action by one of the partners against the other, pltf. claimed (inter alia) a return of the premium he had paid to deft.; & deft. moved to stay all proceedings in the action & to refer the matters in dispute to arbn.:—Held: the arbitrators would have power, under a reference, to award a dissolution of the partnership, & therefore the proper terms of such dis-

the assets are insufficient for the payment of costs then the deficiency must be borne by the partners in proportion to their share of the profits.—CURRAN v. CAREY (1887), 4 Man. L. R. 450.—CAN.

Misconduct in winding up.]—Where, on the dissolution of a partnership between pltf. & deft., it was agreed that deft. should wind up the concern, & pltf. having demanded a statement of account, deft. rendered an untrue & imperfect one, whereupon pltf. brought this action for a winding up, claiming that deft. was indebted to him on account of partnership assets received, which deft. denied, & pltf. succeeded:—Held: deft. must pay the costs of the suit.—CARMICHAEL v. SHARP (1882), 1 O. 1704. —— —— ——.]—A. & B. in Aug. 1894, agreed by their arts. of partnership to refer all disputes arising during or in the winding-up of the partnership to two arbitrators or their umpire. The business, a small pottery business, turned out a failure, &, disputes having arisen, A. in Jan. 1895, brought an action to wind up the partnership. On motion by deft. B.:—Held: the partners having agreed that a dispute such as the present should be referred to arbn., the ct. would not interfere; therefore there must be an order staying further proceedings in the action, & referring the matter to arbn.—DENTON v. LEGGE (1895), 72 L. T. 626; 11 T. L. R. 267; 13 R. 388.

1705. —— —— Partnership articles alleged to be wholly violated.]—The arbn. clauses commonly inserted in partnership arts. apply only to questions arising upon the construction of the arts. & to matters of internal dispute thereunder, & not to a case where it is charged that the partnership arts. have been wholly broken through, & where a dissolution is sought on that ground.

Arts. of partnership contained a clause providing for the reference to arbn. of all disputes & questions respecting the construction of the arts., the accounts & transactions of the partnership, & all matters relating to the partnership. A bill was filed by one of the partners against his co-partners, charging misconduct amounting to fraud, & praying for a dissolution of the partnership, an injunction & a receiver. On a motion to stay the proceedings in a suit, under the provisions of the arts. & C. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 11:—Held: assuming the charges in the bill to be true, the matter in dispute was not within the provisions of the arbn. clause, & the motion must be refused, with costs.

Semble: the onus of proof that an arbitrator could not give effectual relief, lies on the person proceeding otherwise than by arbn.—COOK v. CATCHPOLE (1864), 34 L. J. Ch. 60; 11 L. T. 264; 10 Jur. N. S. 1068; 13 W. R. 42.

1707. —— —— ——.]—The indorsement of a writ in an action between partners claimed to have the partnership accounts taken, & an injunction to restrain deft. from dealing with certain shares in a limited co., & other assets of the partnership. Pltf. delivered a statement of claim which alleged various breaches of the partnership arts. & misconduct on the part of deft., & claimed a dissolution, the return of a premium paid by pltf. to deft., a receiver, & damages, in addition to the relief claimed by the writ. The partnership arts. contained an arbn. clause. Deft. moved to strike out the statement of claim as irregular:—Held: the statement of claim was not an alteration, modification, or extension of the claim made by the indorsement of the writ, & was not within R. S. C., 1883, Ord. 20, r. 4, & must be struck out as irregular.—CAVE v. CREW (1893), 62 L. J. Ch. 530; 68 L. T. 254; 41 W. R. 359; 3 R. 401.

Annotation:—Mentd. A.-G. v. West Ham Corpn. (1910), 74 J. P. 196.

1708. —— ——.]—Where arts. of partnership contain a clause referring all matters in difference between the partners to arbn., the arbitrators have no power to decide whether or not the partnership shall be dissolved, & the ct. cannot give them that power, the question whether or not the partnership ought to be dissolved being one for the consideration of the ct.

Pltf. commenced an action against deft., claiming to have an account taken of the dealings between them under their arts. of partnership, & to have the affairs of the partnership wound up. Deft. then moved that all further proceedings in the action might be stayed, & that in pursuance of the partnership arts. the doubts, differences, or disputes between pltf. & deft. touching the arts. of partnership or the construction thereof, or any clause or thing therein contained, or any account, valuation, or division of assets, debts, or liabilities, to be made as therein mentioned, or any other thing in any wise relating thereto, or concerning the partnership business or the affairs thereof or the rights, duties, or liabilities of either pltf. or deft. in connection therewith, might be referred, as prescribed by such arts., to two arbitrators or their umpire:—Held: the motion must stand until the trial of the action.—JOPLIN v. POSTLETHWAITE (1889), 61 L. One of the partners brought an action before the expiration of the term of twenty-one years for the dissolution of the partnership, on the ground that it could not be carried on at a profit. The other partner denied that the business could not be carried on at a profit, & moved that, pursuant to Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 4, the proceedings should be stayed, on the ground that the matters in difference should be referred to arbn. under the arbn. clause:—Held: the question whether the partnership should be dissolved or not was not a question which could be referred to arbn. under the arbn. clause.—TURNELL v. SANDERSON (1891), 60 L. a term of fifteen years. It was provided by the arts. that if at any time any dispute or difference of opinion should arise between the partners relative to any clause, matter, or thing therein contained, or to the conduct of any of the partners, or upon any other point whatever, the same should be referred to arbn. On June 17, 1873, A. & B. served C. with notice, alleging that he had committed divers breaches of the arts., & in particular had neglected to keep proper accounts & to make proper entries of business, & declaring the partnership dissolved & determined from the date of serving the notice, under a power contained in the arts. C. refused to admit the validity of this notice of dissolution, & told his partners that he should submit the question of the validity of the notice to arbn. On July 1, A. & B. filed their bill for a partnership account on the footing of a dissolution from the time of serving the notice, & on the same day C. served them with notice requiring them to refer to arbn. all questions that had arisen relative to the notice of dissolution. On motion by C.:—Held: he was entitled to an order staying proceedings, in the suit, pursuant to C. L. P. 1744. ——.]—In 1914, a co. was incorporated to amalgamate & carry on two businesses formerly carried on independently by W. & R. respectively. The co. was registered as a private co., W. & R. being the sole shareholders & each of them was appointed a director for life. Although W. held the larger number of shares, yet each held an equal number of shares of the class which alone entitled the holder to a vote. The arts. provided that there should be no casting vote; that one director should form a quorum; & that if any dispute should arise consequent whereon inability to pass a directors' resolution would result, the matter should be referred to arbn. The arbitrators or their umpire were to communicate the award to the secretary to be entered in the minute book, & it was to be equivalent to a resolution duly passed by the board of directors. There was, however, no provision in the arts. that in the general management of the co. all disputes between the directors should go to arbn. In June, 1915, a difference arose between the two directors, which was referred to arbn. resulting in an award to which R. declined to give effect. R. commenced & had not discontinued an action against W., charging him with fraud in relation to the formation of the co. As neither W. nor R. would speak to the other of them, a third party had to intervene for the purpose of transacting the business of the co., which nevertheless made a considerable profit.

A petition was presented by W. to wind up the co. on the ground that a complete deadlock having arisen in the management of its affairs, & it was no longer possible to carry out the essential purposes of the co., its whole substructure was gone, & it was "just & equitable that the co. should be wound up" within Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (c. 69), s. 129:—Held: in the case of a partnership such a state of things as was disclosed in the present case would clearly afford ground for a dissolution of partnership; & circumstances, which would justify the dissolution of a partnership, were circumstances that should induce the ct. to exercise its jurisdiction & order the winding-up of what was in substance a partnership in the guise of a private co.; the business of the co. having been brought to a complete deadlock, it was "just & equitable that the co. should be wound up."—Re YENIDJE TOBACCO CO., LTD., [1916] 2 Ch. 426; 86 L. 1762. —— Unsubstantiated allegations made in action for dissolution.]—(1) Mere incompetence in a partner, however great, is not a bar to the return of any part of the premium paid by him, unless such incompetence has caused damage or injury, when it may be taken into account in determining how much of the premium shall be returned.

(2) Mere delay by one partner in furnishing further capital according to arts. of partnership is not a ground for rescinding the partnership contract, or, in case of dissolution, for depriving the partner of the right to a return of the premium paid by him on entering into partnership.

Where one partner, who has paid a premium on entering into partnership, commenced an action for dissolution, & the other partner immediately afterwards commenced a cross-action for dissolution, & the first partner then filed affidavits in his action containing imputations of misconduct against the other partner, which he did not sustain, & one decree for dissolution was made in both actions, which were practically one litigation:—Held: the making of the imputations was not such misconduct as to disentitle the party making them to a return of his premium.—BREWER v. YORKE (1882), 46 L. 1764. —— Neglect of business—Impossibility of continuing business.]—By arts. of partnership pltf. & deft. agreed to enter into partnership for a certain term from a certain date, unless the same should be previously determined under the provisions thereinafter contained. Pltf. was to pay to deft. a premium of £300. Either party might retire from the firm at the end of any year of the partnership term upon giving to the other partner previous notice, & in such case the other partner was to be at liberty to purchase the share of the retiring partner upon giving to him notice at any time before the determination of the partnership by reason of the first-mentioned notice. If either party should commit a wilful breach of the arts., or act contrary to the good faith which ought to be observed between partners, or should become incapable to take his part in the management of the business, the other partner might expel him by one calendar month's notice in writing, & the partner giving such notice might also buy the share of the expelled partner. There was no provision for returning the premium. Deft. gave notice to pltf. to dissolve the partnership, alleging that pltf. neglected the business to such an extent that dissolution was necessary. Pltf. brought an action claiming a return of the premium paid by him:—Held: as pltf. had behaved in such a way that the partnership business could no longer be carried on, he could not claim a return of the premium.—YATES v. COUSINS (1889), 60 L. 1768. —— Partner mortally diseased at date of partnership—Fact concealed from co-partner.]—P., a medical practitioner, took M., another medical practitioner, into partnership, in consideration of a premium, P. agreeing to give his personal attention to the business for three years, & to introduce M. to his patients. At the date of the contract, P. was, as he well knew, suffering from a mortal disease, which fact was concealed from M. He died a few months afterwards, & a very limited introduction took place. Upon bill by M., praying the usual partnership accounts, & seeking relief in respect of bills given for the unpaid premium, the ct. restrained deft. from suing on the bills, & directed the usual partnership accounts, with a declaration that pltf. was entitled to be remitted a reasonable portion of the premium.—MACKENNA v. PARKES (1866), 36 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—AMOUNT RETURNABLE.

A. In General.

See Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 40.

1775. Part proportionate to unexpired period of partnership.]—A. agrees to take B. into partnership with him for fourteen years, in consideration of a premium of £2,500, one half of which is to be paid at the signing of the arts., & the other half at the time of the execution of a deed of partnership to be founded on the arts. The arts. are signed, the first instalment of the premium is paid, & the parties enter into partnership. After the lapse of a few months, A., under considerable provocation from B., excludes B. from the partnership. The connection is not renewed, the deed is not executed, nor is the second instalment paid; but there is a formal dissolution of the partnership on a certain day. A. afterwards becomes bkpt.:—Held: in the accounts to be taken between A.'s assignees & B., the latter is to be credited with the whole amount of premium, but to be debited with the unpaid instalment, & with an additional portion of premium, calculated with reference to the actual duration of the partnership; also, B. is entitled, without prejudice to any question, to enter a claim for the whole premium under the bkpcy.

One of two partners may have a demand against the other for compensation in the nature of unliquidated damages, & enforceable in equity only.

As to the case Ex p. Broome (1811), 1 Rose, 69, also cited at the bar, I suppose that there a proof in competition with the joint creditors, if any, or to their prejudice directly or indirectly, must have been considered inadmissible; but I am not satisfied that it was LORD ELDON'S meaning, that, if there was to be any proof at all for the purpose of a dividend, the proof could be otherwise than upon an equal footing as to dividends with the proofs of the general body of separate creditors, supposing the rights of the joint creditors out of the question (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).

Suppose the case of an act of fraud, or culpable negligence, or wilful default, by a partner during the partnership, to the damage of its property or interests, in breach of his duty to the partnership: whether at law compellable, or not compellable, he is certainly in equity compellable to compensate or indemnify the partnership in this respect (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—BURY v. ALLEN (1845), 1 Coll. 589; 63 E. Pltf. paid the premium of £600. Afterwards deft. dissolved the partnership by giving a notice as provided by the arts.:—Held: pltf. was entitled to the return of a proportionate part of the premium.—ROOKE v. NISBET (1881), 50 L. J. Ch. 588; sub nom. DAW v. ROOKE, ROOKE v. NISBET, 29 W. R. 842.

1781. Consideration affecting decision—Benefits received by plaintiff.]—On considering the matter very fully, it is quite clear that the amount of premium is not clearly calculated upon the full extent of all the terms of the partnership. There is also a considerable advantage, which pltf. has obtained. He has obtained a footing in a large & prosperous & populous town, & has probably made himself known to a considerable extent. He has also probably made himself known very much among the customers of deft. It is impossible for me to come to a satisfactory conclusion upon that subject, & I have adopted a sort of broad mode of solving the question, & I am of opinion that one half of the premium out to be paid to pltf., & no more (ROMILLY, M.R.).—JAUNCEY v. KNOWLES (1859), 29 L. 1840. —— For goodwill to belong to remaining partners—General assets debited to new firm.]—The estate of deceased partner is entitled to participate in the goodwill of a business, which does not belong to the surviving partners, except by express agreement.

By partnership arts., on the death of a partner, the survivors were entitled to the goodwill. A., a partner, died in 1801, having appointed his co-partners exors. They continued the trade, having made out an account, from which it appeared that the assets, consisting nearly wholly of outstanding debts, were £496,000, the liabilities £410,000, & the surplus £85,900, of which A.'s share was £55,000. The survivors carried this to the credit of the deceased partner's account, & they paid the amount with interest to the cestuis que trust as they respectively came of age. In 1831 the children claimed to participate in the profits of the subsequent trading, which, in the thirty years, had amounted to £308,000, on the ground that their capital had been employed therein. At the hearing, inquiries were directed with a view to charge them. But, on the master's report, the ct. having come to the conclusion that at the testator's death the surplus was merely nominal, that the business, to wind up, was insolvent, & that the subsequent profits were attributable to goodwill & the personal exertions & capital of the surviving partners:—Held: pltfs. were not entitled to participate in the profits, so far as those profits were attributable to the goodwill & connection in trade of the old firm, & their share in that portion of the profits in which they would be entitled to participate could not be estimated higher than the interest already paid.

There are three classes of cases frequently occurring where the liability exists of accounting for the profits made in the carrying on of a trade, by the use of capital belonging to the estate of a deceased person. The first class I refer to is that of surviving partners, who, after the partnership has been dissolved by the death of one partner, continue the trade with the capital composed wholly or in part of the estate of the deceased partner. The rule applicable to such a case is . . . that the profits are matters arising from capital & that consequently they belong to the persons to whom the capital belongs. . . . The third class of cases . . . is the mixed case where the surviving partners are also the legal personal representatives of the deceased partner. The liability to account in this case, does not necessarily proceed on the ground of misconduct but involves a consideration of the circumstances of each particular case (ROMILLY, M.R.).—WEDDERBURN v. WEDDERBURN (1856), 22 Beav. 84; 25 L. B. afterwards formed a partnership with C. & carried into it the stock of A. & B.; a commission issued against A. & B.:—Held: (1) after the satisfaction of the creditors of B. & C. the joint effects of B. & C. were the separate property of B., & not the joint property of A. & B.

(2) Under that agreement A. was a partner with B. as to a third of his interest but was not a partner with B. & C.—Re SLYTH, Ex p. BARROW (1815), 2 Rose, 252, L. C.

1845. Apart from express agreement—General rule.]—Where a surviving partner has carried on the partnership business without withdrawing from the concern the capital or share of deceased partner, there is no absolute rule that, in taking the subsequent accounts of the partnership dealings, as between the surviving & the estate of deceased partner, the division of the profits shall be determined by the aliquot shares of the several partners in the business in their joint lifetime, or by the amount of the agreed capital which they were respectively to supply, or by the actual amount of the capital belonging to the surviving & the estate of deceased partner respectively; but the principle of division may be affected by considerations of the source of the profit, the nature of the business, & the other circumstances of the case.

By arts. of partnership A. & B. agreed to become partners for twenty-one years, & to take the profits in the proportion of seven-tenths to A. & three-tenths to B., in case of A.'s death during the term B. was to carry on the business, for the residue of the term, with A.'s exor.'s, who should be entitled to one-third of the profits, & B. to two-thirds; B. paying to the exors. so much money as A.'s share of the capital exceeded one-third, to be ascertained by appraisement. On the death of A. during the term, B., who was his exor., carried on trade with the whole of testator's capital, & without following out the provisions of the arts., accounting, however, to A.'s estate for one-third of the profits, & paying 5 per cent. upon the excess of A.'s capital:—Held: B. was liable to account for the profits of the business since A.'s death.

In such a case there is no universal rule as to the proportion of profits to which the estate of deceased partner is entitled; & the ct. will not decide upon such proportion without a previous inquiry as to the nature of the trade, the amount of capital employed, the state of the accounts at the death of the testator, & the conduct of the business afterwards.—WILLETT v. BLANFORD (1842), 1 Hare, 253; 11 L. 1871. What property may be sold—Decree for sale several years after dissolution.]—Where a partnership is dissolved, &, after the dissolution, one of the partners, without the consent of the other, continues in possession of the partnership effects, & carries on the same business on the same premises, in the course of which the specific effects that belonged to the partnership are, in whole or in part, consumed, & replaced by others; the effects, which are found on the premises, & with which the business is carried on at the date of a decree, declaring the partnership to have been dissolved before the institution of the suit, are not to be treated as property of the partnership.

The Vice-Chancellor has directed all the property to be sold, which was in the house in Clifford Street at the time when the decree was pronounced, several years after the dissolution of the partnership, as if all the property which at the time of the decree, existed in the house, was, without inquiry, to be considered as partnership property. It [decree] must be varied, by directing the master to take an account of the particulars of the partnership property which were in the house in Clifford Street at the time of the dissolution, & of the value of the property at that time; & to inquire whether any part of that property still remains in the house (LORD LYNDHURST, C.).—NEROT v. BURNAND (1827), 4 Russ. 247; 6 L. 1872. Share to be bought by surviving partner or sold to third party—Refusal of survivor to buy or admit third party.]—A surgeon sold one fifth of his business & entered into partnership with the purchaser for such term as they should mutually agree to continue. The arts. provided that, in the event of the death of a partner, the survivor might purchase his share & interest in the business, but if he should decline, it should be sold to any other person. The purchaser died at the end of fifteen months, & the surviving partner declined either to purchase or to admit a purchaser into the business. He was charged with the value of deceased partner's share & interest.

This partnership having been entered into . . . in consideration of £800. . . . I think it was not in the power of [one partner] to dissolve it the next day & keep the £800 in his pocket. This ct. would have interfered, & though he might have put an end to the partnership he would have been compelled to repay the consideration (ROMILLY, M.R.).—FEATHERSTONHAUGH v. TURNER (1858), 25 Beav. 382, 28 L. 1894. ——.]—At the outbreak of war on Aug. 4, 1914, three German subjects were carrying on, in co-partnership with F., their English partner, the business of merchants in London under the style of A. O. M. & Co. Under the partnership arts. F. was the managing partner in London, & on the dissolution by the declaration of war he carried on the business & collected the assets with the view of liquidation. No accounts had been taken between the partners since Dec. 31, 1913. F. died in 1920, & the deft. was his legal personal representative. By an order of the Board of Trade dated Apr. 1, 1924, it was ordered that all the property, rights, & interests of the three German partners in the assets of the firm in respect of any claim against the English partner, or his estate, should vest in pltf., who should take all necessary proceedings to collect what might be due to the German partners. In an action by pltf. as custodian of enemy property with the object of winding up the partnership he claimed an account against deft. of all dealings between the German partners & the English partner, including all dealings with the partnership assets since the dissolution, payment ot what should be found due, & an inquiry of what the partnership property consisted. The German partners were not added as pltfs. in the action :—Held : in the absence of the German partners as parties to the action no such relief as was asked could be granted, & the action failed.

I conceive the following to be a correct summary of the legal relations of partners in a dissolved partnership. Where assets are collected & got in, no partner has any definite share or interest therein, his right is merely to have the assets so collected applied in discharging the liabilities of the partnership firm & to receive his share of any surplus there may be when the liquidation has been completed ; & further, there can be no relationship of debtor & creditor between partners unless & until the accounts have been finally taken & a balance has been ascertained to be due from each one to the others. Nor is any partner entitled to an account from his co-partners except upon the footing that, in accordance with the implied obligation arising under the contract of partnership, he will himself account & submit to be charged with any balance found to be due from him (EVE, J.).—PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. ELDER, [1926] Ch. 266 ; 95 L. The residue or deficiency will be profits or losses, in either case divisible in the agreed proportions. The ratable application of the surplus assets in payment of capital claims must be subject to the liability to contribution to make up a deficiency, & to the claim of any of the partners against the entire assets to answer it.—BINNEY v. MUTRIE (1886), 12 App. Cas. 160 ; 36 W. 1898. Priorities—Repayment of capital with preferential rights.]—Pltf. & deft. had been partners under arts. providing that the business should be carried on " for the mutual & common benefit of the partners, & risk of profit & loss in equal shares." Deft.'s capital was to be £1,500 ; pltf.'s, £750. The capital of each partner to carry interest at 5 per cent., to be allowed yearly before making up the accounts. Sums brought in by either partner above those amounts to bear interest at the same rate, payable before any other interest, & to be withdrawable at three months' notice. The partners were to be at liberty to draw certain specified sums on account of their shares of profits. The remainder of each partner's share of profits to be added to his capital, & bear interest at 5 per cent. to be paid before division of net profits. On dissolution, after payment of debts, " the remaining capital, stock, moneys, & credits belonging to the said partnership shall be divided, or received or taken by the said partners according to their respective shares or interests therein." On dissolution, the capital standing to pltf.'s credit was not much increased ; that of deft. greatly so, partly by accumulation of profits, & partly by cash brought in by him. After payment of debts, the assets were insufficient to replace the two capitals in full :—Held : the assets, after payment of debts, ought to be applied first in repaying to deft., with interest, the additional capital brought in by him in cash, & the residue ought to be divided between the partners in proportion to their capitals.—

That motion was refused; but on the cause coming on for further consideration, on a question affecting the proportion which each of the partners was to contribute towards the partnership losses:—Held: (1) the share of the infant partner was irrecoverable as an asset of the partnership; (2) the debts & liabilities, with the exception of the infant's salary, must be paid out of the certified assets; (3) the infant disclaiming his salary, it was not to be paid to him.—WRIGHT v. TANNER (1869), 20 L. Upon a dissolution, after satisfying all liabilities to creditors & the advances of two of the partners, the assets were insufficient to make good the capital. A considerably larger sum was due in respect of capital to G. than to M.:—Held: having regard to above sect., the true principle of division of assets was for each partner to be treated as liable to contribute an equal third share of the deficiency, & then to apply the assets in paying to each partner ratably what was due to him in respect of capital.—GARNER v. MURRAY, [1904] 1 Ch. 57; 73 L. 1909. Winding up — Costs — Set-off.] — Where a limited partner was joined as resp. to a petition to wind up & did not oppose, & his costs were ordered to be paid out of the assets of the limited partnership, & he was subsequently placed on the list of contributories & incurred costs payable to the liquidator on an application to have his name removed from such list :—Held : the liquidator could not set off such two sets of costs one against the other, because the costs of the winding up stand on different footing from other costs, as being incurred for the benefit of everybody concerned.—Re BEER, BREWER & BOWMAN (1915), 113 L. T. 990 ; 59 Sol. Jo. 510.

1910. Clubs.]—I had thought, but without much consideration, at the Assizes, that these sort of institutions were of such a nature as to come under the same view as a partnership, & that the same incidents might be extended to them ; that where there were a body of gentlemen forming a club, & meeting together for one common object, what one did in respect of the society bound the others, if he had been requested & had consented to act for them. Several cases have been cited in the course of the argument, which do not apply, with the exception of one of them, to societies of this nature. Trading assocns. stand on a very different footing. Where persons engage in a community of profit & loss as partners, one partner has the right of property for the whole ; so, any of the partners has a right, in any ordinary transactions, unless the contrary be clearly shown, to bind the partnership by a credit ; he might accept a bill of exchange in the name of the firm, & as between the firm & strangers the partnership would be bound, although there might be an understanding in the firm that he was not to accept. It appears to me that this case must stand upon the ground on which deft. put it, as a case between principal & agent (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).—FLEMYNG v. HECTOR (1836), 2 M. & W. 172 ; 2 Gale, 180 ; 6 L. 1911. Friendly societies.]—The members of a benefit society raised a joint stock fund, portions of which were from time to time advanced to members of the society, by way of loan, at 5 per cent. interest : the sums so advanced were put up to competition among the members, & the members who bid highest obtained the loan. Deft., a member of the society, having bid £15 17*s.* 6*d.* for a loan of £80, the £15 17*s.* 6*d.* to be paid in addition to 5 per cent. interest on the £80 :—Held : the transaction was not usurious.

The judge who tried the cause thought that there had been no loan, but merely an advance of partnership funds in which deft. was interested in common with the other members of the society. A motion has been made for a new trial on the ground of misdirection ; but we think the case arise, & it was more expedient that the partnership should be wound up by the ct.—MUIRHEAD v. BORLAND, [1925] S. C. 474.—SCOT.

In the meanwhile pltf. supplied defts. & other intended members of the assocn. with certain goods, & now sued the former for the balance due in respect was properly left to the jury. The question was, whether the transaction was a loan of money or a dealing with the partnership fund. If it was a loan it was usurious. 1914. Trade protection society.]—By the rules of a society "for the protection of trade" the professed object of which was to watch the progress of measures through Parliament affecting the trade interests, & to protect its members from the practices of the fraudulent & dishonest, the committee had the appointment of the printer & stationer, to be elected from among the members of the society; & to the committee was to be referred the defraying of the expenses, & the applying & disposing of the moneys of the society. & it was also provided by the rules, that the sum of £10 should be left in the secretary's hands to meet the current expenses; but that all orders for the payment of money should be drawn by the secretary upon the treasurer at a committee meeting. Pltf. was appointed printer & stationer to the society, & shortly afterwards paid his subscription. Defts., who were members of the committee, passed the resolutions for the orders for printing & stationery which were supplied by pltf.:—Held: pltf. was not precluded by the rules from suing defts., as the rules did not create a partnership between the members of the society; & it was not to be inferred from the rules that pltf. looked to the fund, & not to the parties who gave the orders.—CALDICOTT v. GRIFFITHS (1853), 8 Exch. 898; 1 C. 1919. ——.]—Building societies are not governed by the doctrine of partnership, but by the doctrine of principal & agent, all the members being principals & the directors their agents. Therefore all members of a society not registered under the Building Societies Act, 1874 (c. 42) are liable to contribute towards the payment of the ordinary creditors of the society & there is no difference in this respect between advanced & unadvanced members. Unless the rules or the terms of their mtges. expressly exonerate them from liability, advanced members cannot redeem without contributing to ordinary debts.
